"(B) SUBSTITUTION OF DEBT INSTRUMENTS; REDUCTION OF OVER-COLLATERALIZATION.—Paragraph (2)(B) shall not apply to—

"(i) the substitution of a debt instrument described in subsection (c)(1)(B) for another debt instrument which is a permitted asset, or

"(ii) the distribution of a debt instrument contributed by the holder of the ownership interest to such holder in order to reduce over-collateralization of the FASIT,

"(C) publishes the determination described in subparagraph (B) in the Federal Register.

"(2) CONSIDERATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.—In making any determination under paragraph (1), the President shall give great weight to—

"(A) the extent to which the beneficiary developing country has assured the United States that such country will provide equitable and reasonable access to the markets and basic commodity resources of such country, and

"(B) the extent to which such country provides adequate and effective protection of intellectual property rights.

"(3) OTHER BASES FOR WAIVER.—The President may waive the application of subsection (c)(2) if, before July 1 of the calendar year beginning after the calendar year for which a determination described in subsection (c)(2) was made with respect to a beneficiary developing country, the President determines that—

"(B) OTHER WAIVER LIMITS.—The President may not exercise the waiver authority provided under this subsection with respect to a quantity of an eligible article entered during any calendar year beginning after 1995, the aggregate appraised value of which exceeds 15 percent of the aggregate appraised value of all articles that have entered duty-free under this title during the preceding calendar year from those beneficiary developing countries which for the preceding calendar year—

"(i) had a per capita gross national product (calculated on the basis of the best available information, including that of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) of $5,000 or more; or

"(C) CALCULATION OF LIMITATIONS.—There shall be counted against the limitations imposed under subparagraphs (A) and (B) for any calendar year only that value of any eligible article of any country that—

"(i) entered duty-free under this title during such calendar year; and

"(ii) is in excess of the value of that article that would have been so entered during such calendar year if the limitations under subsection (c)(2)(A) applied.

"(5) EFFECTIVE PERIOD OF WAIVER.—Any waiver granted under this subsection shall remain in effect until the President determines that such waiver is no longer warranted due to changed circumstances.

"(e) INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMISSION ADVICE.—Before designating articles as eligible articles under subsection (a)(1), the President shall publish and furnish the International Trade Commission with lists of articles which may be considered for designation as eligible articles for purposes of this title. The provisions of sections 131, 132, 133, and 134 shall be complied with as though action under section 501 and this section were action under section 123 to carry out a trade agreement entered into under section 123.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1613(c) (42 U.S.C. 1382b(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) DISPOSAL OF RESOURCES FOR LESS THAN FAIR MARKET VALUE.—(1)(A)(i) If an individual who has not attained 18 years of age (or any person acting on such individual's behalf) disposes of resources of the individual for less than fair market value on or after the look-back date specified in clause (ii)(I), the individual is ineligible for benefits under this title for months during the period beginning on the date specified in clause (iii) and equal to the number of months specified in clause (iv).

"(ii)(I) The look-back date specified in this subclause is a date that is 36 months before the date specified in subclause (II).

"(II) The date specified in this subclause is the date on which the individual applies for benefits under this title or, if later, the date on which the disposal of the individual's resources for less than fair market value occurs.

"(iii) The date specified in this clause is the first day of the first month that follows the month in which the individual's resources were disposed of for less than fair market value and that does not occur in any other period of ineligibility under this paragraph.

"(iv) The number of months of ineligibility under this clause for an individual shall be equal to—

"(I) the total, cumulative uncompensated value of all the individual's resources so disposed of on or after the look-back date specified in clause (ii)(I), divided by

"(D)(i) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), this subsection shall not apply to a transfer of a resource to a trust if the portion of the trust attributable to such resource is considered a resource available to the individual pursuant to subsection (e)(3) (or would be so considered, but for the application of subsection (e)(4)).

"(ii) In the case of a trust established by an individual (within the meaning of paragraph (2)(A) of subsection (e)), if from such portion of the trust (if any) that is considered a resource available to the individual pursuant to paragraph (3) of such subsection (or would be so considered but for the application of paragraph (2) of such subsection) or the residue of such portion upon the termination of the trust—

"(I) there is made a payment other than to or for the benefit of the individual, or

"(II) no payment could under any circumstance be made to the individual, then the payment described in subclause (I) or the foreclosure of payment described in subclause (II) shall be considered a disposal of resources by the individual subject to this subsection, as of the date of such payment or foreclosure, respectively.

"(2)(A) At the time an individual (and the individual's eligible spouse, if any) applies for benefits under this title, and at the time the eligibility of an individual (and such spouse, if any) for such benefits is redetermined, the Commissioner of Social Security shall—

"(i) inform such individual of the provisions of paragraph (1) providing for a period of ineligibility for benefits under this title for individuals who make certain dispositions of resources for less than fair market value, and inform such individual that information obtained pursuant to clause (ii) will be made available to the State agency administering a State plan under title XXI (as provided in subparagraph (B)); and

"(ii) obtain from such individual information which may be used in determining whether or not a period of ineligibility for such benefits would be required by reason of paragraph (1).

"(B) The Commissioner of Social Security shall make the information obtained under subparagraph (A)(ii) available, on request, to any State agency administering a State plan approved under title XXI.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'trust' includes any legal instrument or device that is similar to a trust; and

"(B) any other public agency with whom the State has made an agreement for the administration of the State program under this subpart which is still in effect;

"(B) would have received such aid in or for such month if application had been made therefore, or the child had been living with a relative specified in section 406(a) (as so in effect) within 6 months prior to the month in which such agreement was entered into or such proceedings were initiated, and would have received such aid in or for such month if in such month such child had been living with such a relative and application therefore had been made.

"(b) LIMITATION ON FOSTER CARE PAYMENTS.—Foster care maintenance payments may be made under this subpart only on behalf of a child described in subsection (a) of this section who is—

"(c) VOLUNTARY PLACEMENTS.—

"(3) has been determined by the State, pursuant to subsection (g) of this section, to be a child with special needs.

However, in no case may the amount of the adoption assistance payment exceed the foster care maintenance payment which would have been paid during the period if the child with respect to whom the adoption assistance payment is made had been in a foster family home.

"(e) PAYMENT EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding subsection (d), no payment may be made to parents with respect to any child who has attained the age of 18 (or, where the State determines that the child has a mental or physical disability which warrants the continuation of assistance, the age of 21), and no payment may be made to parents with respect to any child if the State determines that the parents are no longer legally responsible for the support of the child or if the State determines that the child is no longer receiving any support from such parents. "(A) that there exists with respect to the child a specific factor or condition such as the child's ethnic background, age, or membership in a minority or sibling group, or the presence of factors such as medical conditions or physical, mental, or emotional handicaps because of which it is reasonable to conclude that such child cannot be placed with adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this subpart or medical assistance under title XIX or XXI; and

"(B) that, except where it would be against the best interests of the child because of such factors as the existence of significant emotional ties with prospective adoptive parents while in the care of such parents as a foster child, a reasonable, but unsuccessful, effort has been made to place the child with appropriate adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this section or medical assistance under title XIX or XXI.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. HOBSON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the motion.

The text of the motion is as follows:

Mr. HOBSON moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 2491.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EWING). Pursuant to House Resolution 279, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOBSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very historic time. We have fully debated this bill back and forth. The Senate made two minor changes as a result of the Byrd rule. The antitrust provision for prior-sponsored organizations was removed and the clinical laboratories was removed for Byrd rule purposes.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think that with the agreement that we have with the President on the CR, we have now reached a very historic point. One that we have worked very hard for on both sides of this aisle. We are now in agreement that we will balance the budget in 7 years and we will use CBO scoring. That, we all believe, is a good move.

Mr. Speaker, I think we all believe that this is a historic moment as we move forward to preserve this country for the future of our children and get the spending of this country under control. It will not be easy, but I think it is something that everyone has general agreement upon that we must do, and we must move forward with it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this was a bad bill when it left the House. It is a bad bill when it comes back from the Senate. Now it will be a bad bill when it goes to the President. He should veto it.

Mr. Speaker, let us be clear. We want to balance the budget in 7 years, but how we do it is immensely important. I believe my Republican friends also believe how we do it is immensely important, otherwise I would make a simple offer. If only achieving the goal was the only thing my Republican colleagues care about, we will do it, and they can vote for our product. I do not think they would accept it.

Mr. Speaker, we will not vote for their product. We need to get through our differences, get a plan that is fair and moves this country forward, and that is our task in the next several weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a "no" vote on this bill today, and then I and many others stand ready to achieve a 7-year balanced budget that is fair to the American people.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. MEEK].

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I urge that every Member of this House vote against this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I am against this bill because it is flat out unfair, especially in the area of health care. The almighty quarter-trillion-dollar tax cut was spared from the cutting knife, while health care for poor, sick people was cut by $163 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this bill cuts at the expense of poor people who need medical care. It favors rich people and holds the sorry promise of hurting 35 million people.

These Medicaid cuts could also force as many as 172,000 poor veterans to lose Medicaid coverage by the year 2002. Combined with the effects of other cuts, many poor veterans could be left without any health care at all.

Mr. Speaker, where are the savings in forcing poor people to get their health care at expensive emergency rooms, where the bill must be paid by poor local citizens? Just a year ago in this House, we talked about helping the 37 million Americans who do not have health care. What a difference a year makes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOEKSTRA], a member of the Committee on the Budget, until recently.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I think today is a great day. We have reached an agreement with the President that we will work together to balance the budget in 7 years. We will use conservative scoring, so that we can be assured that we will reach that objective, by using the Congressional Budget Office.

Today, we will be voting on one plan to get there: The Balanced Budget Act of 1995, which does get us to a balanced budget by the year 2002. We may have some differences with the President, but at this point in time, we are not sure exactly what they may be. We need a plan for the President so that we can compare our differences about how we achieve a balanced budget.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that we need is we need a pledge from all the candidates for President that they will work with Congress over the next 7 years to make sure that this becomes a true promise and a true commitment that we will actually all be committed to working toward getting to that balanced budget over the next 7 years.

Mr. Speaker, as we take a look at what our plan does, we can see that this really gets to be a discussion not about cutting spending but actually a discussion about how much money we will spend over the next 7 years.

From 1989 to 1995, the last 7 years, we spent $9.5 trillion in Washington. This Balanced Budget Act says that over the next 7 years we will spend $12 trillion, which is a little bit less than what some people had hoped we would spend, which is about $13.3 trillion.

Mr. Speaker, in 1995, we spent $1.5 trillion. That is going to grow to $1.8 trillion by the year 2002. We are spending plenty of money in Washington over the next 7 years. We are actually growing Federal spending by about 27 percent over the next 7 years.

☐ 1645

That is a lot of money. There is a lot of benefits to balancing the budget. It is estimated that if we balance the budget, the American people will realize a 2-percent reduction in interest rates. That is a significant cost over what a car loan may cost, over what student loans may cost, over what the mortgage that one will pay, the mortgage payments that one will make on interest over the next 7 years. So the benefits to balancing the budget far outweigh the costs.

We need to manage growth in spending to about 2.7 percent over each of the next 7 years to get a balanced budget. That is not a sacrifice; that is just good, sound management. If we manage a 2.7-percent growth, there will be a shared benefit by all the American people and a better standard of living because Washington will finally have gotten their costs under control for the benefit of all the American people.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from Oregon [Ms. FURSE].

Ms. FURSE. Mr. Speaker, my father always told me, if you see someone who acts tough but who picks on defenseless people, that person is a bully. This budget picks on defenseless people, kids, pregnant women, disabled, seniors. This bill takes away the guaranteed basic health care coverage for children in poverty, and guaranteed coverage for pregnant women.

This bill ends the guarantee that we will take care of our disabled children and our seniors. The Portland School District has written to me and said, please protect guaranteed access to Medicaid for poor and disabled children.

I guarantee that I will work to find a sensible way to balance the budget, but not on the backs of children, not on the backs of pregnant women, not on the backs of disabled Americans.

Let us stop the bullies. Reject this really extreme budget.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes and 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, this truly is an historic moment. I just want to thank my colleagues on this side of the aisle who have weighed in over the last 9 months to come forward with a truly revolutionary budget and to thank my colleagues on this side of the aisle for their criticism, constructive at times, and in some cases maybe not. But ultimately what is exciting is that we all have agreed that we need to balance our budget in the next 7 years and so we have brought forward our budget.

I am looking at the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] as someone who I have tremendous respect for who has made valid points about concerns that he has as it relates to his urban area. I welcome the opportunity for him to come in with his 7-year budget and the changes he would make. I bet ultimately we will find a document that may even be improved from what is here.

Why do I like what we have done? We have balanced the budget in 7 years. We have created an environment in which we can transform this social and corporate welfare state into an opportunity society and, in the process, also saved our trust funds, particularly Medicare, from bankruptcy.

And I look at the budget, I know there have been incredible criticisms of what we are not spending more of. I have not heard of comments from the other side of the aisle where we need to cut more from. That ultimately will happen now that we have a 7-year budget to have a debate about.

We are spending more on the earned income tax credit. It is going up 28 percent, from $19 billion basically to $25 billion. We are spending more on the school lunch program in the next 5 years. We are going to go up from $6.3

to $7.8 billion. We are spending 50 percent more in the student loan program. It is going to go from $24.4 to $36 billion, a 50-percent increase in the next 7 years.

In the next 5 years students are going to increase from $6.7 to $8.4 million. Medicaid is going to go from $89.2 to $127 billion. Medicare is going to go from $178 to $289 billion. We are going to have, on a per-person, per-elderly basis, we are going to have the seniors, the amount we spend per senior go from $4,800 to $6,700.

If we are spending so much more, why do people call it a cut? Well, partly because they think in some cases that they want you to think that we are cutting when we are spending more and, in part, because we are slowing the growth in spending. Bottom line, to balance the budget in the next 7 years, we have to eliminate some programs and we do. We eliminate the Department of Commerce. We eliminate certain units within departments. We cut back and eliminate discretionary spending. In some cases, what we are doing is slowing the growth in spending like in entitlements. Entitlements are 50 percent of our budget and they are doubling every few years. Medicare and Medicaid are 17 percent of the budget, and they are doubling every 5 to 7 years depending on which years.

The bottom line is, we are going to get our financial house in order and balance the budget compassionately. We are going to save our trust funds, particularly Medicaid, from bankruptcy. And we are going to transform this caretaking, social and corporate welfare state into a care and opportunity society. I believe that we have a wonderful document to present the President. I am told he is going to veto it. Then in the next few weeks we have the opportunity, working with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, to get their priorities. To weigh it with ours and ultimately to present the President a budget he can balance and sign.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, we have in the Republican plan a unique schedule to balance the budget. The deficit in 1997 will be $25 billion more than it is in 1995. It is a strange path.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, with corporate welfare incredibly off the table and with an incomprehensible call for tax cuts in the fact of these huge deficits, the Republicans want to savagely cut what will be needed to adequately fund Medicare and Medicaid, even though health care costs are increasing and our elderly population is growing.

With the return of this conference report to the House, we have another opportunity to do what we should have done in the first place: say no to these devastating cuts in Medicare and Medicaid.

The President has made it clear he will not sign a bill that destroys these two programs. Medicaid is not only subject to deep and unsustainable cuts in this budget, but the program itself is repealed. And this cannot happen.

We have 18 million kids depending on Medicaid for their health care. That is 1 in 4 in this country. It makes no sense to turn our backs on them.

Millions of seniors and disabled people depend on Medicaid for nursing home coverage, millions of middle-class families need to know that this help will be there for their parents. Severely disabled kids and adults have nowhere else to turn, if they cannot depend on Medicaid.

We cannot accept a program that adds millions of America's kids to the rolls of the uninsured. We cannot undo the only program we have got to help deal with the astronomical cost of long-term care. To take hundreds of billions of dollars out of this program is wrong, especially when we are not touching corporate welfare. Why are we giving tax breaks and paying for it by cutting these two programs?

Every American should be grateful to the President that he is standing up and saying he will not accept the destruction of Medicaid, that he will not see damaging cuts in Medicare. We should not accept them either. Vote no on this conference report.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS].

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, the ranking member of the Committee on the Budget rightfully pointed out that the deficit in the second year of our budget goes up slightly. I would just point out to the gentleman that if we make no change, it goes from 210 to 230 with present CBO scoring. With the President's 10-year budget it goes from 189 to 217. With new CBO scoring the gentleman is right, it is 157 and it will go to 175. And this, to me, is an example of how all of us need to work together in the second year budget to make sure that instead of going up, it goes down. And I look forward to working with my colleague to see that that does in fact go down.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, we heard a previous speaker on the other side describe this budget as being bullying, heard it described as extreme. I do not know what is extreme about giving the average American family a savings of $2,558, which is what the most conservative projections of economists say that you would get of savings of interest costs on a car loan, savings of interest costs on a car loan, savings of interests costs on a student loan and, of course, tremendous savings of interest on a mortgage loan. I do not know anything that is extreme about giving American families that kind of savings. I do not know anything that is bullying. I think that is helping American families.

Nor do I find anything extreme about a budget that goes from the current amount of $9.5 billion we spent in the last 7 years to $12 billion. That is an increase, a gigantic increase in spending. The difference of course is found in the third column. If we do nothing, if we follow what the President would have us do, it would go up even more. And that is the difference between balancing the budget and saddling American families, saddling children, saddling our next generation with even more debt, borrowing from them today to pay for more debt tomorrow.

A child that is born today is going to pay $179,000 in taxes just to pay the interest on the national debt over the course of his or her lifetime. That is before they pay any of the debt. That is before they get anything from student loans or from health care grants or anything else. That is just to pay the debt, the interest on the national debt.

The President's spokesman did get it right when he said one thing, he said, this is not about numbers. This is much more philosophical than that. This is much more deeper than that. This is about a different vision of where America goes. And I agree. it is a different vision.

We believe it is the vision of America as one where individuals have responsibility and have opportunities. The vision of the other side seems to be to keep the status quo, keep saddling the American family, keep saddling the next generation with more debt. We cannot go on doing that.

The President said he would veto this, but I hope that this President will change his mind when he looks at this and not veto this legislation.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], distinguished ranking member of what used to be the Committee on Energy and Commerce. I do not know what it is called now. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a vision of America, too, and one which, I think, is far better justified than anything I have heard coming from the other side of the aisle. That is a place where there is compassion, where when people are down, there is a hand out to help them up, not a handout but a handup. That is what is really important.

I rise in strong opposition to this misguided bill. It does more damage to more programs than I can discuss in the time available.

I will talk about Medicaid. Let us recognize the simple truth, this bill destroys the Medicaid Program. That is a program that provides health care coverage for 36 million Americans, including 4 million elderly, 6 million disabled, 18 million children, and 8 million mothers. Now, under the Gingrich and the Republican majority plan, we are no longer concerned with trying to protect health care coverage. Instead, we are taking health care coverage away from millions of Americans.

Under the mantra of States rights, Republicans are shredding the safety net. The Republican bill arbitrarily cuts $160 billion from Medicaid. The Republicans argue this is not a cut, but $160 billion equals almost 2 years of total Federal spending under this program. You cannot tell me that that is not a cut, when you reduce the program by 2 years' worth of Federal expenditures.

Further, the bill abdicates the Federal Government's total responsibility in Medicaid. It destroys the guarantee of health care for the elderly and for the needy, and it invites abuse by the States. In fact, it takes away all guarantees of coverage under current law. Families could be forced to sell their family home or the family farm to pay for a loved one's nursing home care.

Families could face costs of as much as $40,000 a year for nursing home care for their parents. Families caring for seniors with Alzheimer's or strokes would have no guarantees, nor would the disabled, the children, or the pregnant women. That is cruel, and it is unnecessary.

☐ 1700

Last but not least, this program takes away the current law guaranteeing that Medicare premiums of low-income seniors will be paid so they can see a doctor.

The bill walks away from responsible Government to help people in favor of lining the pockets of the wealthiest Americans with tax cuts. This is wrong. I urge my colleagues to reject it.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. INGLIS].

Mr. INGLIS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I suppose we are all prone to exaggeration at times, and as my colleagues know, sometimes in the political process, when we exaggerate for effect, that is, I suppose, the definition of demagoguery. I suppose we are all guilty of that at some point or another, but as my colleagues know, the consequences of demagoguery can be different depending on what the issue is.

In the case of our side, maybe we demagogued a little bit on the President's tax increase of 1993, but do my colleagues know what? There were no people who really lost sleep about that; there were no people who went to bed at night wondering whether they were going to be able to make it. But there are people that are losing sleep because of what is being said, particularly at this other lectern, about Medicare.

There are people like a lady whose name I would not use who met with me recently at Wade's Restaurant in Spartanburg, SC, who was very worried about Medicare because of some of the things she has heard right here. But when I explained to her what is going to happen in Medicare and the fact that we are going to increase Medicare spending from $4,800 per person to $7,000 per person in the new numbers, she was greatly relieved. In fact, she is now convinced that this will work all right for her after hearing the full presentation.

So I would really urge my colleagues to be very careful in this debate as we talk about the next several weeks about balancing this budget. There are some people that are very scared, and they are scared without reason because we are going to increase Medicare spending; and in fact, in the rest of the budget, what our colleagues see is we are spending more every year over the next 7 years.

So all of those people out there, the scare groups are trying to scare to death, they are having their intended effect, and some people really are scared. But when they hear that we are actually going to increase spending to $12 trillion over the next 7 years, rather than watch it gallop off the cliff at $13.3 trillion, saving about $1.3 trillion over the next 7 years, we can actually balance the budget, and when they see those numbers, they go to sleep at night, and they have a good night of rest.

I hope that we will tell them the truth in this Chamber.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, this Republican budget bill should be opposed because it repeals Medicaid, the health care program for low-income people, in order to pay for tax breaks for the rich. In effect, this is Robin Hood in reverse, and I cannot believe that our country has come to this. Thirty-six million people will no longer be guaranteed coverage. They will be dependent upon the States which will receive 18 percent less in Federal funds than the Congressional Budget Office estimates is necessary to maintain current coverage. That means more than 8 million people who would have been covered by Medicaid would likely be without insurance because hard-pressed States would be forced to keep them off the roles. The States do not have the money; where are they going to get it? They are not going to raise taxes, and people will be without health insurance.

The bill, when it came back from conference, also says that States are allowed to spend only 40 cents on a dollar in order to get 60 cents in Federal dollars. So that means that a lot less money could be coming to the States than even is anticipated because States would not have to put up their matching funds.

The bill says it is going to provide protections for women and children up to 100 percent of poverty, but allows States to define the benefits package. It also purports to protect the disabled, but allows the States to define who the disabled are and how they will be treated.

What does that mean? A lot of disabled would not be covered; a lot of pregnant women and children would not be covered; and lastly what it does, it also repeals the current law guarantee of payment of Medicare part B premiums on behalf of the elderly.

Speaker GINGRICH told us a couple weeks ago that that guarantee would be there, that low-income seniors would have their Medicare part B premium paid for. There is no such guarantee in this bill. It is up to the States like everything else.

Mr. Speaker, in this continuing resolution that was adopted today for the first time President Clinton got into the continuing resolution that the budget should provide adequate funding for Medicaid. I hope that this bill is defeated and that, when the negotiations start with the President and the Republican leadership, that that principle that President Clinton has so well articulated, provide adequate funding for Medicaid, is finally accomplished. This bill will not accomplish that goal. Hopefully, once this bill is defeated and the President vetoes it, we will have some negotiations to that effect.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BASS].

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOBSON] for yielding this time to me.

Quick item: We heard a previous speaker talk about lack of corporate welfare, attention in our Balanced Budget Act of 1995. I would suggest looking here in the Joint Committee on Taxation report that we have here at least three or four pages of corporate and other reforms. The total comes to approximately $26 billion. In my book that is not small change.

Like everyone else here, I have listened to the debate all day long about the continuing resolution, and I would like to say that there are no losers in this battle. The people of this country are the big winners as a result of what we have done over the last few days.

Let us talk for a minute about what the President has agreed to with respect to saving Medicare. Well, indeed in our Balanced Budget Act of 1995 we increase spending in Medicare from $178 to $289 billion. The President has said that we must pass tax policies to help working families and to stimulate future economic growth. Well, indeed we do that in our Balanced Budget Act.

For example, in capital gains we allow individuals who make less than $53,500 to benefit from capital gains preferential treatment. The President is agreed that we must provide adequate funding for education, the environment, agriculture, Medicaid, national defense, and veterans. Well, surely our veterans budget, which goes from, let us see, $36.9 to $41.8 billion is an increase and as compared to the President's veterans budget which constituted a reduction from the baseline of over $17.1 billion. Under the GOP budget, student lobbies would increase from $24 billion today to $36 billion by the year 2002.

In short, Mr. Speaker, what this Balanced Budget Act calls for is reasonable increases while we protect and preserve the future of this country for our children and our grandchildren. Who could ask for more? Certainly not anybody who was watching this debate today.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINK].

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Speaker, this is a bad bill for a lot of reasons. We have heard our colleagues on the other side talk about what really is a high goal for all of us, and that is balancing the budget so that we do not pass the debt on to the next generation, but that is exactly what this bill does.

If your parents are lucky enough to survive, and they are going to be in a nursing home facility, there is nothing in this bill that ensures that there is an entitlement in the new Medigrant Program so that they will actually have Medicaid that will be paying for their nursing home care, and so adult children will quite often find themselves paying $35,000 or $40,000 per parent themselves, out of their own pocket, taking away from their own families, taking away from their own savings, taking away from their own ability to buy a home, from their own ability to educate their children. We are really forcing these adult children into poverty because the parents are living longer, and any parent who lives long enough and sees that they are going to become a burden on their children will not want to live, and I say that this really sets the plate for Dr. Kevorkian to have more franchises across this Nation than McDonald's does.

It also will put a tremendous burden on the counties that operate nursing homes. They will either have to throw out these nursing home patients or they are going to have to raise local taxes to make up the difference.

This is a bad bill, and it is a bad direction, and I hope Members will vote no.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to vote yes on this Balanced Budget Act today. This is a good bill. It is good for America, and it is good for the future of this country and for our children's future.

There are four major goals we have set as Republicans for this year, and this bill incorporates these goals, and the goals are:

To balance the budget in 7 years without smoke and mirrors but real numbers; second, save Medicare; third, welfare reform, real reform focusing on families and work; and fourth, tax relief for families and for job creation.

So we have set out our four major goals, and this bill incorporates those goals.

Now the President basically agrees with our goals; at least he has been rambling on saying he does, and, finally, yesterday he agreed on the 7-year balanced budget. During the campaign in 1992, he said 5 years, and we have gone to 10 years and 7 and 9. Now we have got the President pinned down to 7 years with real numbers.

Now the President talks like he wants to save Medicare, but we have no specifics. We have a specific plan that I think is a good plan. It increases the spending on Medicare per person each year for 7 years. It is the fastest growing part of the Federal budget. We go from $4,800 per person to $6,700 over with the new scoring to $7,100 per person. Every year there is more money for Medicare recipients. We have a good plan because, basically, it just gives choice.

Now what does the President propose? He has no plan. He has no plan. He tried to socialize medicine in his first 2 years in Congress. The vote rejected that last year. He has no plan to save Medicare, but he says he wants to save it, so at least he agrees with the goal.

The goal we have is welfare reform. We have a specific plan passed by both the Senate and the House. We have a welfare plan that is a good plan, passed by both the House and the Senate. The President campaigned on welfare reform in 1992 and said let us change it as we know it. So he agrees with our goals.

And then tax relief. We want to give tax relief to families. So does the President, and the President is going to support a capital gains tax that stimulates jobs in this country.

So what are we fighting over when the goals are there? It is pure politics by the President. They are using fear tactics on Medicare. The Governor in Florida used that to perfection during the campaign in 1992 and now admits it. The President used it, but the previous speaker is talking about Kevorkian, using that as a comparison, talking about destroying Medicare. The Washington Post was right last week when they said, stop scaring seniors.

The end result is we are going to pass the bill the President is going to sign that is going to be remarkably the name as the plan we are going to vote and approve today. I urge my colleagues to pass this bill today.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DEUTSCH].

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, I am so tempted to take the 1 minute and respond to my colleague and good friend from Florida [Mr. MILLER] about Medicare because there are just flatout distortions in what he just said, but I think the focus right now is Medicaid, and let us talk about Medicaid for the country and for Florida as well.

Unless there is some part of this bill which I have not seen which figures out how to cure illness and old age, the results of this proposal will be devastating to the country in the whole, but particularly to Florida. Florida will be more adversely affected than any State in this country, and I continue to urge my 15 Republican colleagues in Florida who could make the difference in stopping this bill from becoming law to vote against this proposal. There is an opportunity to make history today, this evening, and I urge my colleagues [Mr. MILLER] as well as my other Republican friends from Florida to do that.

Because, if they do not do it, let us just talk a little bit about what will happen. People will still get sick. People will still get pregnant. But what will happen is they will be treated in community hospitals throughout our State at more cost and less service.

I urge the defeat.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the entire Western World has found a way to provide health insurance for its entire population, yet in the United States we only provide it for elderly people, people who have retired. Yet today under this reconciliation bill, the Republicans are now beginning to chip away at even that. Not only the Medicare cuts are there, but also Medicaid cuts, which will remove the entitlement that currently acts as a safety net for over 65,000 senior citizens in nursing facilities just in my State of Texas alone, millions more in the United States.

In other words, now there is nothing that requires States to assist impoverished seniors and their families with costly nursing home care in the future. Such care averages about $40,000 per year. The requirement that that be provided is now gone.

There is no way to make these numbers add up. While the population of our State grows over the next 7 years, this bill and its ridiculous formula locks in historical spending patterns that will ensure that Texas seniors and their families will be left without medical benefits. The fact of the matter is that a grandmother in New York is going to get twice as much as a grandmother in Texas. This is an outrageous bill. Vote "no."

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from St. Petersburg, FL [Mr. GIBBONS], the dean of the Florida delegation.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, we all know this bill is going to be vetoed. It was terrible when it left here, and it is still terrible when it gets back here from the Senate and from conference. This bill savages the most vulnerable people in our society.

Mr. Speaker, let me answer some of the arguments about a balanced budget. Everybody wants to balance the budget. Everybody wants to balance it as quickly as possible, without hurting the economy and without savaging people. The question is, who is going to pay for this? Who is going to bear the burden of this balancing of this budget?

Mr. Speaker, let me say first, we are on the way to a balanced budget. Three years ago the budget deficit was about $300 billion a year, 3 years ago. We just completed the fiscal year, and the budget annual deficit is down to $160 billion. If the economy holds up like it has been going for the last 3 years, we may balance this budget in much less than 7 years, more like 4 or 5 years. That is possible. But it all depends upon the strength of the American economy.

What we want to do here in Congress is not foul up the American economy, to keep it working like it is, and the budget deficit will solve itself.

Second, Mr. Speaker, we have to figure out and present to the President a decent way to balance the budget. Who is going to pay the cost? The Republican proposal, as it is outlined in this legislation, puts the cost on children, on infants, on the working poor, on the sick, and on the elderly. Those are not proper priorities for balancing the budget.

One of the things that vastly complicates this budget balancing is the Republican desire to pay back some of their wealthy political contributors. They give back to them $250 billion, $250 billion that they take away from the sick and the aged and the children.

Let me go over how this $250 billion is distributed. The top 10 percent of American families will get 40 percent of that $250 billion. Let me repeat that. The top 10 percent will get 40 percent of that $250 billion.

The next wealthiest 20 percent, or wealthiest 20 percent, will get 60 percent of that $250 billion. Those with family incomes of more than $150,000 will get 45 percent of all of this tax cut. The average family income in the United States is about $32,000 per year per family. That is the average. Everybody below that, all half of the 55 million families that are below that, have less than $32,000 a year income. But you know how much those 50 percent of the people get? One percent, 1 percent of all these cuts.

That is just not fair, Mr. Speaker. The American public knows it is not fair. That is why the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. GINGRICH's, negatives are so high. That is why the Republicans are losing out in the polls, because the American public understands the simple facts, that this proposal is not fair.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and the reconciliation bill. I hope that during this Thanksgiving, and God knows we have a lot to be thankful for, that when we say our prayers we might think of some of the people that are poor, that are sick, that are disabled, that are aged, and really do not know what the future holds for them.

There are those on the other side that say that we are scaring these people, that they have nothing to worry about, that they are in their mothers' arms with the Republicans' reconciliation bill.

I do not know whether Democrats have the right answer, but when we start talking about the lesser of our brothers and sisters, the blind and the disabled, those who are working hard, trying to keep their pride and their dignity, and you see these programs being reduced, the rate of growth being reduced, and people being denied service, you wonder where is the outrage. How can Republicans come to us and say that they would like to reduce taxes by $250 billion, balance the budget, and nobody is going to get hurt? I was just amazed as to how you got this far with that type of arrogance and that type of contempt.

I am pleased today to know that it is not Democrats and liberals screaming that say that this is outrageous, but it is our moral leaders. And God knows how they are registered; I do not. But is it not exciting to see that we now have the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, and I know they do not have a political axe to grind, but they are saying that in this country, this great Republic, that we should have a safety net for our disadvantaged. They are asking that this bill be vetoed because it is unfair to the poor. This did not come from the DCCC.

One might say, "Catholics are not the most popular people that we have in this country," and lo and behold, we have Christians and Jewish groups calling for a veto. "The very moral fabric of our Nation would be torn," the leader said in his statement. "The Government is renouncing its 60-year-old promise to be protectors of the last resort of its poor, its disabled, and of abused children." It is the Eastern Orthodox denomination, rabbis, ministers, conservative Judaism, the Protestant Council.

I think there is a way out. I think the Republicans really knew that there was a difference in ideology and that they have been getting away with murder, but they signed an agreement, or at least signed off on an agreement with the President. You vowed that you were going to protect these programs. But the great thing about this agreement is that you show "* * * adopt tax policies to help working families, to stimulate the future economic growth * * *."

You also said you were going to protect these programs that made America great, that have given opportunity among our poor. Why do we not forget the politics, why do we not forget the reconciliation bill, why do we not get on with the people's business and say that we do want a balanced budget, but you can only do that after you take care of your budgetary needs and you do not give the tax breaks to the greedy.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I think the good news is that there has to be a slowdown of the bomb-throwing from the other side now, because some of those bombs might come back to haunt them. Now, hopefully, we are going to sit down, we are going to talk about what is the best way to achieve a reduction in the increase of spending over the next 7 years.

I just wanted to relate to some of the concerns about the tax breaks and who they are going to. The net tax decrease in this bill is $226 billion. Just for a minute, compare that to what happened in 1990, when we had an increased tax of $280 billion. Compare that to what happened in 1993, when we had a tax increase spread over 7 years of $350 billion.

If you believe the economists when they say that these kinds of tax increases are a depressant on the economic and job expansion, is it reasonable to give some of those tax breaks back, take away some of those tax increases of 1990 and 1993? I say yes, if we want to increase job opportunity and the standard of living, we have to look at ways that leave some of this hard-earned money in the pockets of the people that earned it.

We have to start looking at the fact that this country, over the last 10 years, has a lower savings rate than any other industrialized country in the world. Guess what our savings rate in this country is; about 5 percent. Compare that with South Korea, at 32 percent; compare it with Japan, at 21 percent. We have been paying out, enjoying our benefits now and pay later.

That is what we have been doing in this Government. We have been borrowing from our kids to satisfy what we think are our today's needs.

Mr. Speaker, Republicans promised to provide a tax cut that is targeted to middle-income Americans. Look at this chart. We have kept our word. Our tax plan will help strengthen American families, and it is going to give job creation a boost. Sixty-five percent of the relief goes to people with incomes below $75,000. If you want to go up to $100,000, then 82 percent of these tax cuts go to families that are receiving less than $100,000. It is for middle-class families, it is to benefit job creation.

Mr. Speaker, throwing bombs, it is easy to say, "Well, we think you are hurting this group or this group or this group," or, "You are disadvantaging this group just for tax cuts to the wealthy." Now, if we are going to agree to this, and the Democrats and the President have said, "Yet, we will go with a 7-year balaned budget," now we have to start talking turkey over this Thanksgiving period. We are going to have to say, "Here is where I think you should reduce the spending more than you are reducing it today."

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is so good news for the American people that we have agreed to have a 7-year balanced budget. It is what we need to do if we are really concerned about our kids and our grandchildren.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would respond to a quick question, I would ask him, which tax increase of 1993 is repealed in this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would tell the gentleman, I do not know the specific tax increase, but I can tell you that we are putting some of this money back in the American people's pockets. It is a $500 tax cut for individuals.

Mr. SABO. The answer is none.

□ 1730

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I could not help but just get up here and say a few words, because I heard the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], my friend, stand up here and talk about giving tax breaks to our rich friends; and I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] stand up here and talk about giving tax breaks to the greedy.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleagues, I have friends in my district who live down the street from me. They have been married quite a while now; they have five children. They have a total income of $41,000. He is a postal worker and his wife works part time—$41,000.

Mr. Speaker, to people on the other side of the aisle, that is rich. I want them to take this $500 tax credit. We are going to put it in their pocket so that they can put it in the bank.

Another couple lives down the street the other way with an income of $47,000. Two of them are working to get that joint income. They are married, and they get penalized for it; while two people living singly together, not married, do not have to pay this kind of a tax.

We are going to take care of that. We are going to do away with that penalty.

Then we have the capital gains tax. I have two people that work for Sears & Roebuck. They have worked there for 38 years, they have saved their money, they have stock options, they have been holding that stock all of these years. They have an income of $49,000 between the two of them. Is that rich?

They want to retire next year, sell their $100,000 home. It cost them $8,000, now it is worth $100,000; and they want to cash in their stock and their house to go to Florida and enjoy the sunshine. Are they called rich?

What is this business about a tax cut for the rich? Republican tax proposals are targeted toward working middle American families.

Vote for this bill. It is good for America.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, I would say to the gentleman, what he outlined, they do not pay any taxes. They do not pay any taxes.

Under the facts and circumstances that were outlined here by the previous speaker, those people, if they pay any taxes, they are getting the wrong tax advice. Their home is, under the circumstances that he outlined, completely exempt from taxation.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, this body will now clear reconciliation for the President and he will correctly veto it, and then we will get down to the real negotiations on a balanced budget in 7 years.

Mr. Speaker, I really hope when we get to those negotiations, very serious negotiations, because after what has happened over the last week, we cannot afford any more of this nonsense that we have seen, that we really deal with the facts and not the chart that the gentleman just had on the floor, because if we talk to Treasury, they do not deal in charts, they deal in figures.

Mr. Speaker, that chart ignores the fact that most of the $32 billion of the earned income tax credit on incomes of $28,000 and less are not involved in that chart. They ignore that tens of billions of dollars in tax reductions from a multitude of provisions that primarily benefit corporations and shareholders are not in that chart.

For instance, the particularly bizarre treatment of the alternate minimum tax. That chart ignores the fact that $12 billion in tax reductions in the estate and gift taxes, no matter whether we agree with it or want it or like it, we have to have these things in the numbers to come up with the correct chart; and we know that that is in there, and it is not in that chart.

Another press release that I saw recently from the other side has asserted that 1996 families with children will either have no net change in their earned tax credit or will have a net tax reduction. This is absolutely untrue. This analysis manipulates information by picking and choosing which parts of the earned income tax credit, which is the working, low-income credit for families, are put into the numbers to get that chart.

So even when we consider a combination of the earned income tax credit cuts and the family credit, 8 million families credit, 8 million families are not losers.

Call Treasury, ask for the numbers. Let us forget the charts, the pictures, and the carryings on.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FRANKS].

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as I listen to my friends on the other side of the aisle, they would seemingly suggest that unless the huge bureaucracies of the Federal Government here in Washington spend our tax money, we cannot improve the lot of underprivileged people; that somehow we cannot improve the lot of our American families, unless this huge Washington bureaucracy captures all of the available tax money and spends it; that somehow, if communities spend it, if families spend it, they will not do it as compassionately, they will not do it as thoughtfully. However, the people who look at this town and look at the waste inherent in this huge Government know that if we can transfer power, money, and responsibility back to communities and families, we may be able to make more progress in confronting the challenges that await America in the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest threat is for us to do nothing, to merely let this Government run on autopilot, because if we do that, a truly tragic result will ensue. Just 17 years from now, every single tax dollar sent to Washington, DC, will be consumed by just five programs; and four of those programs are vitally important, Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and Federal Employee Retirement Benefits. But the fifth program that will consume all of the tax dollars 17 years from now is the interest payment on the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, that is a tragic future awaiting the next generation. We have to relieve that burden of debt that our endless credit card charging has left to our next generation. The only moral course let to us is to make the tough decisions to balance the budget, and that is what the measure before us does.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], the ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DE LA GARZA: Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the conference report on H.R. 2491.

Mr. Speaker, while I support the goal of a balanced budget and voted for the Democratic approach to achieving that budget over 7 years, I must take great exception to this agreement which sacrifices one of our most important national goals—that of preserving the health of our rural economy and the adequacy of our Nation's food production system.

Mr. Speaker, the Gingrich-Armey conference agreement endangers our Nation's food security. While the cuts initially ordered to be attained in agriculture were irresponsibly drastic, the approach taken by the Republican leadership to eliminate the farm safety net altogether threatens to wreak havoc on the rural economy. No longer will producers be able to count on the Government when its own macroeconomic policies destroy their markets, as happened in the mid-1980's.

Under H.R. 2491, agricultural commodity programs—which have been key to our success in ensuring a consistently adequate, safe, and affordable food supply—will end with the 2002 crop year. Mr. Speaker, the Republican plan not only eliminates our Federal farm safety net, but it also makes devastating cuts in programs which allow our agricultural sector to compete with the European Union in farm trade. The future of our agricultural economy is in foreign trade but the Republican plan amounts to unilateral disarmament when our competitors are subsidizing heavily to take away markets that our more efficient producers would otherwise capture. With the tremendous beneficial impact that farm trade has on our economy as a whole, the Republican policy of drastically reducing the export enhancement program is extremely foolhardy.

Mr. Speaker, there is substantial agreement now that the budget must be balanced. The American people want it balanced and we are working toward that goal. The Gingrich plan before the House today takes the wrong approach where rural America is concerned. Reductions in discretionary spending totals cut deeply into the programs that are vital to rural Americans. We have to continue to marshal our resources in a way that ensures we do not endanger the future of our rural economy on which our Nation so heavily depends.

And yet, without the benefit of a single hearing, the Gingrich-Armey leadership has imposed an entirely new program that eliminates the Government role in ensuring the farmer a fair return. Instead, the Gingrich plan establishes a program of flat payments to farmers: regardless of what they plant; regardless of the level of market prices.

Mr. Speaker, farmers in every region of this country have very grave concerns about the agriculture provisions in this bill. They represent a sudden and dramatic abandonment by the Government of its role in sharing the farmer's risk. Farmers are particularly concerned that this sudden withdrawal of the Federal Government may make the difference in their fight to stay on the farm. Yes, they may know that each year they will get a cash payment, but if prices collapse next year, will that payment be enough? If wheat prices fall to $2.50, how many wheat farmers will be out of business in Kansas, in the Dakotas, in Washington? If cotton prices fall back down to 45 cents, how many cotton growers—spread out all over the South—will survive? If corn prices are under $2, where will the Corn Belt be?

Agriculture deserves more consideration than has been given by this Congress and I am glad that the President has won from Speaker GINGRICH a commitment to recognize that fact in upcoming negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, other parts of the Republican plan disregard the special needs of the rural economy. The cuts it would make in Medicare and Medicaid will have devastating and inordinate effects on rural hospitals and the provision of health care in rural areas. In block granting Medicaid and reducing funding available for low-income health care services, support to health care in the State of Texas alone will be cut by 20 percent. These cuts will fall heavily in rural areas where health care services are sparsely provided to begin with. In a specific move, the Republican plan removes current rules designed to prevent spousal impoverishment and imposes a new possibility—that a lien could actually be placed on a family farm before the owner's spouse would be eligible to receive public assistance for catastrophic medical services.

In addition, the Republican plan eliminates any link between Medicaid spending and localized economic distress. Currently, an economic recession in a heavily rural State would result in increased resources being made available under Medicaid. Under the Republican block grants, the amount to be available—already severely reduced—would become highly inadequate if conditions in the farm economy deteriorated.

The Republican plan also has tremendous implications for rural hospitals. Rural residents are chronically underserved. The plan's cuts in payments to hospitals will threaten the viability of many rural hospitals and clinics. In the days ahead, we must act to protect the ability of rural Americans to improve the availability of health care in their areas.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly oppose H.R. 2491. Make no mistake: my colleagues who vote for it are voting to end farm programs. It's a bad bill; it is opposed by the American people; and because of that the President will veto it. I am encouraged, however, that the President and the Congress have now explicitly recognized that we will, in fact, agree on a balanced budget. I am encouraged that we can now sit down in a bipartisan manner and fashion an agriculture policy that will recognize these basics: First, the need to preserve the farm safety net; second, agriculture has contributed heavily in the past to deficit reduction; third, continuation of investment in rural America is of crucial importance; and fourth, the need to continue to provide the resources necessary to maintain a level playing field with our export competitors.

Mr. Speaker, I came here in 1965. The first bill I introduced was a balanced budget amendment, so no one can point a finger at me and say I have not tried. I have served with Presidents Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, Clinton, Bush, Reagan, and I respected them always, I respected my colleagues; but when foam comes out of the mouths when they say "tax and spend liberal Democrats," I resent that.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, we cut over $50 billion. My colleagues have to respect that; my colleagues have to admire that. We did. If everybody else had done the same thing, we would not be here.

And then I had to explain to someone, what is this continuing resolution? I said, so we can continue running the Government.

Well, my dear friends, you waited 40 years to get here, and you messed it up the first year. You did not pass your appropriation bills. The President cannot legislate. It is a legislative failure, and you are the majority, and nobody has noted that.

You are arguing with the President, Bill Clinton. You did not pass the appropriation bills. It is a legislative failure, and it is on your side of the aisle, and I am sick and tired; and I am not going to abuse anyone, I am not going to do rhetoric, I am not demagoging, I am telling the truth. You did not pass the appropriation bills. It is a legislative failure.

I have helped cut some $50 billion in 12 years, not from the poor, not from those that need it, but in the area where it could be judiciously done. So think about that.

I am coming over and telling your side, you have been a legislative failure. You waited for 40 years, and you have messed it up.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, we just wish the rest of his colleagues would have followed him in balancing the budget by cutting so much.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues ask what items are not in this thing that we are taking back on the taxes. Well, I would tell my colleagues that a balanced budget in 7 years, by itself, is a big reduction in taxes on the American public. When you increase taxes $270 billion and you give back $245 billion, that is a lot. When your bill increased the marginal tax rate on the middle class and we take it off, that is a big tax back to the American public.

When a $500 deduction is given to people, even my colleagues would have to admit, that is not all going to the rich. About 70 to 80 percent of it is going to people below $100,000, and most of that, down below that. So that is being given back. And by not sending billions of dollars to Russia and extensions of Somalia and Haiti and sending 25,000 troops to Bosnia, they are not going to be paying those taxes and those dollars at all.

So I would tell my colleagues, we are doing a lot in the balanced budget and giving money back to people that the President did not.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding. I would say to the gentleman from Texas, in regard to the remark he just made, the biggest appropriation bill of all, the bill funding the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education amounting to $270 billion is being held up in the Senate, we passed it in the House, because the Democrats will not let it come to the floor.

So do not say that it is our fault that all the bills have not passed. They are the ones that are preventing it from being heard.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, the leader in the Senate is named DOLE. The majority is Republican. Do not come to me telling me that the Democrats are holding it up.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WELDON], and I believe that under the rules of the Senate, it takes 60 votes to pass a bill.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Balanced Budget Act of 1995. One of the biggest reasons why I support this bill, and I believe very strongly we need to pass it as a nation, is that it will lower interest rates paid by all Americans on all of their loans.

For example, a typical average American family such as many of those living in my district, Florida's 15th Congressional District, the space coast, can see up to $121 a month in savings on their mortgage payments. That amounts to $1,456.

When decreases in student loans are added in that will occur when the Government is not out borrowing money, the decrease in the interest rate on student loans, car loans, and add that to our child tax credit for those typical hard-working families in my district, they could see up to as much as $2,000 of disposable income in their pocket.

This makes sense. The American public wants the budget balanced. Hardworking Americans across the Nation will benefit from it.

Support the Balanced Budget Act.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], my good friend.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I oppose this version of the balanced budget amendment for many, many reasons, one of which I will talk about, on agriculture. But a second one is that this one that we are about to vote on increases the debt of the United States by $41 billion more over the next 3 years than the balanced budget amendment that I and a large number of Members on both sides, I believe, will soon end up supporting, and that is the so-called coalition budget.

□ 1745

But I repeat, the balanced budget amendment borrows $41 billion more than the better alternative that we could have voted on today.

Let us talk about agriculture for just a moment. We Democrats learned a lesson 2 years ago when we tried to reform our health care system partisanly, in closed meetings, behind closed doors, and excluding the minority, and we were wrong. We paid the price because nothing good happened. Now we have the majority writing farm policy behind closed doors in a partisan manner, excluding the minority. You are wrong today for doing that, to bring a farm bill as part of this reconciliation that destroys the safety net for agriculture, an agriculture community that must compete in an international marketplace, an international marketplace that is not as free as those who have designed this policy, not members of the Committee on Agriculture. This farm part of this reconciliation bill was not written by the House Committee on Agriculture. It was written in the Speaker's office and by certain designated hitters who chose, in fact, to put their philosophical beliefs into this reconciliation agricultural portion.

Another reason I oppose this version of the agriculture component is that it does not by any stretch of imagination recognize the unique needs of rural health care. The Medicare-Medicaid cuts from rate of increase, I readily concur with every chart I have seen, they are totally accurate in what they say, but they are immaterial. It is immaterial what we are talking about numbers unless we change the policy that goes with it.

The policy directions that are present in the budget we are about to vote on do not address the needs of rural America, health care, rural housing, water and sewer, conservation needs, research. Research, we are continuing to cut in that area.

These are the things that concern many of us on this side of the aisle, that the agricultural component, the policy, the decisions in which we are going to see whether or not some future speaker can stand in this area right now, as I am standing and talking to you today, and saying are we not blessed to live in a country that has the most abundant food supply, the best quality of food, the safest food supply at the lowest cost of any other country in the world. We do not do that by accident. We do not do that by following blind philosophical beliefs. We do it by following good policy. Oppose this budget. Support one that will have better policy.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. RADANOVICH].

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, thank God we are all in the same arena finally with the 7-year balanced budget scored by CBO. For the first time we are comparing apples to apples, not apples to oranges. I think that is terrific.

Now that we are doing that, we need to recognize two things. We need to ask these two things: First, should the Federal Government be doing everything that it is doing right now, and if not, let us figure out how to privatize it. If we should be, let us figure out how to localize it. From there we can go into the budget, cut what needs to be cut, freeze what needs to be frozen, eliminate what needs to be eliminated, and slow the rate of growth for certain programs that need a slowed rate of growth.

The reason why I say this is because we have been doing that since January. The result of this is contained in the Balanced Budget Act of 1995. That is why I support it.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Ladies and gentleman of the House, let me not today repeat what I said before about this budget. I think everybody knows my criticisms of the budget. Everybody has heard the arguments on the other side, and they have been good on both sides.

I think that yesterday when we reached this agreement, everybody won. Everybody got to put into the resolution their beliefs about how this will hopefully come out. It was a compromise in the truest sense of the word.

More important, yesterday America won and the American people won. Our form of Government is one where people with very different beliefs, from very different backgrounds, from very different parts of the country have to eventually come together and work together to find consensus and compromise. That is hard to do, because all of us hold our beliefs strongly. Both parties have very strong beliefs that they hold dearly.

JOHN KASICH was right the other night when he said we are doing now that people sent us here to do. They sent us to fight for them. They sent us to fight for their beliefs, and they sent us to fight for our beliefs.

And kind of the irony of our form of government is that when we finally get down to that grand compromise, what we started to do yesterday and we are going to have to do a lot more of in the next 3 or 4 or 5 weeks, people get put off because they think we are compromising. People get mad because we are compromising, although it is precisely what we all have to try to do to make this great country work.

So I guess I wanted to rise tonight not to argue the budget again. We have kind of done that.

I rise tonight to talk to all of us as human beings, and to say to each of us and to myself, in the last days, and it is no one's fault, but in the last days things have gotten awfully personal and awfully tough in this body, and people, including myself, have said things that probably, with better judgment, we would not want to say. I ask all of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, in the days ahead, which are going to be tough, that we depersonalize this discussion.

I can disagree with you without being disagreeable. I do not always accomplish that myself, but I should do that.

I can disagree with you vehemently and still respect you and like you as a human being, because I believe all of our motives are good. Our motive is to help the country. Our motive is to make the country better. Our motive is to improve the American society and our people.

So I just ask, as we go through these next 3 or 4 or 5 very difficult weeks, that we continue to respect one another and like one another, and admire one another as Americans and as patriots and as well-meaning human beings, as we disagree, so that at the end we have the ability to stretch and to move to that compromise which the American people want us so desperately to achieve.

We can do this. We can do it. We are smart enough, we are strong enough, we are good enough to find that compromise. With God's will and help, we will do it.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], our outstanding chairman, a person who has worked so hard to get here and so hard over the weekend.

Mr. KASICH. I appreciate the gentleman yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, let me say right off the bat, I am about all speeched out. I think that deserves an ovation.

I think that we were able to achieve a framework which we thought was important, the 7 years counted by CBO. Within that framework, we were able to list the priorities that we all feel strongly about. Over the next 4 or 5 weeks, we will fight within that framework and I think at the end of the day we will reach agreement.

I do not know how to feel about it today. In some sense maybe we overestimate how difficult this will be. I think that the minority leader is right. What a great speech he just made. He just said we are going to not personalize this stuff and we are going to fight in the great American tradition. At the end of the day, we will reach a deal and we will move the country forward. I think we will move it forward, because when the American people understand we are going to use real numbers, we do not have a goal, we do not have a dream, we have a reality, we are going to lay down the first down payment toward certainly rescuing the next generation.

I want to say to my colleagues that the negotiations were very positive. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO], the leading Democrat on the Committee on the Budget, sat in. Even though we felt strongly, we were actually able to have discussions with the President's Chief of Staff without anybody yelling and screaming at one another. It is going to be tough over the next 4 or 5 weeks, but I think we will get the job done.

I hope for everybody, we are going home for Thanksgiving tomorrow, we sit around the table, we say our prayers, and my prayer for everybody is to have a very happy Thanksgiving.

Mr. Speaker, we are all in a good mood. Let me not say anything that gets us in a bad mood here. I think we will come back after Thanksgiving rejuvenated. We will sit down and we will go through it.

But I think the people should know, and SAM GEJDENSON just suggested to me that it was a good point, that we all have strongly held principles.

I look over on this side of the aisle. I cannot think of a person that holds principles stronger than JOHN LEWIS. JOHN LEWIS took a beating over principles, and I am proud to serve with him in the House of Representatives.

We will get this done. We will work it out. We will put the country first. We got the framework. Happy Thanksgiving. Let us all come back healthy and happy and ready to go to work.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Balanced Budget Act of 1995, and I fully intend to carry through on the pledge I made to the people of southern Missouri by voting to pass this historic budget. Over the past several decades the national debt swelled to more than $4.5 trillion. This debt will cost taxpayers $234 billion this year and will saddle our children with an even larger burden. Enough is enough. Conservatives vowed when we took control of Congress to get this great Nation's fiscal house in order. The Balanced Budget Act delivers on that pledge.

Mr. Speaker, the stakes in this debate could not be higher. The fiscal future of the United States hinges on the ability of this Congress to make the tough choices required to balance the budget. It's more than debating trillion dollar figures—it's about making our economy stronger and providing American families with a better chance to make ends meet. A balanced budget enhances our entire economy with lower interest rates that will empower families and workers with stronger purchasing power. Mortgages, cars, and education become more affordable and the American dream moves closer to reality.

This process has not been an easy one, requiring many tough choices. The result is a balanced budget in 7 years, using real budget numbers—not "smoke and mirrors." The Balanced Budget Act limits Government spending increases, provides tax relief for low- and middle-income families, ends welfare as we know it, and preserves and strengthens Medicare and helps small businesses create jobs. Conservatives in Congress and the American people are committed to balancing the budget, and we want President Clinton to join in this commitment. The obligations we owe to the American people, their children, and our Nation's future generations, deserve nothing less than decisive action to preserve our future by balancing the budget.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2491, the Balanced Budget Act. What we are doing is of enormous significance. We look at all this squabbling and ask: Does this make any difference? This is the ninth shutdown of Government in 12 years, but you probably don't remember any of them. So why is this different?

Those shutdowns were over how much we were going to grow programs. Democrats in Congress would say increase a program by 10 percent and a Republican President would say, I can only give you 5 percent. So, split the difference at 7½ percent.

This is different. We are not talking about the difference between 5 and 10 percent, but eliminating programs and agencies and reducing Government's hold on Americans through its grip on their wallet.

This is a revolution that is underway. And revolutions are messy. The Government shutdown and impasse on the spending bills are just the tip of the iceberg. But it is an important tip.

The President tried to tell the American people he couldn't sign a stopgap spending bill because it had extra things on it—Medicare premiums for example.

So we sent him a clean continuing resolution last night. Nothing on it. Nothing. Just one provision that commits the President to negotiating—not even reaching agreement on a 7-year balanced budget—just to negotiate. This President has said, as recently as 2 months ago, that he favored a balanced budget in 7 years. During the campaign he said he could balance the budget in 5 years. In fact, he has publicly stated that it could be balanced in 10 years, 9 years, and 8 years.

By saying he would veto the continuing resolution, the President has said he cannot, will not, agree to a balanced budget now, next year, 7 years, 10 years—ever.

This rhetoric has been going on for years. The press reported it again yesterday: The President said, "Yes, I'm for a balanced budget, but we can't cut Medicare, we can't savage programs for the poor, we can't abandon welfare recipients, and we can't change job training programs". In other words, I'll talk about a balanced budget, but I just can't bring myself to doing anything about it.

Well, this morning, we are going to do something. We have on the floor, as I speak, a bill that utterly transforms the way we think about government. This Balanced Budget Act preserves Medicare. In fact under this proposal it's going up per person from $4,800 to $6,700 in 2002, or 40 percent. It is a lie to say we are cutting Medicare.

The Balanced Budget Act gives control of Medicaid to the States—a concept that has proven to work with the Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System. It gives States the authority to implement welfare reform; it eliminates all farm subsidies in 7 years; it abolishes the Commerce Department and scales back others; and it eliminates more than 100 Federal programs.

Our Balanced Budget Act also gives each family earning less than $110,000 per year a $500 per child tax credit. That's hardly a tax break for the rich. That's a break for many, many middle-class Americans.

And let's look at the benefits of a balanced budget. Interest rates would go down, making it easier for Americans to purchase homes, cars, major appliances, and so on. That would spur economic growth, and our children and grandchildren would no longer be saddled with this enormous deficit.

More than 80 percent of the American people have said they want a balanced budget, and we have delivered one. We have done it for our children because we have borrowed long enough from our children. Now it's time for the President to stand behind his words with actions and join us—not fight us—in this effort.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this historic legislation.

Mr. MINGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to talk about the farm commodity portion of this bill. This body passed the so-called freedom-to-farm bill 1½ months ago. Like most things around here, the title is misleading. It had many shortcomings. My farm friends said it could more aptly be called the Family Failure Act of 1995. However, Chairman ROBERTS at least identified several of the essential points of a good farm program.

Tragically even these good points have now been compromised:

Significant payment limitations have been deleted. While we eliminate fuel assistance for low income rural folks, industrial scale farmers will still receive huge payments. In fact, they will receive an extraordinarily unfair share of farm program funds.

Equity among crops is lost. Corn, wheat, cotton, and rice were all treated the same by Chairman ROBERTS. In the budget reconciliation bill, cotton and rice have a program that could not survive if considered separately.

Flexibility is compromised. Conservation-minded farmers who wish to reduce erosion and renew the soil by growing hay lose a portion of their options. They are forced to cultivate to qualify for benefits.

The inequities of dairy marketing orders survive. We have a national economy, but not for dairy farmers. Upper Midwest dairy farmers are being discriminated against by byzantine milk marketing orders. These orders should be consolidated or abolished.

This bill's farm provisions benefit regional interests, and owners, and industrial-scale farming. It is politics as usual. We had an opportunity to establish a creative farm program; to provide tools that farmers could use to manage risk. This bill blows that opportunity. It should be defeated.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support on the conference report on H.R. 2491, Balanced Budget Act of 1995. I wish to take my limited time to speak to the importance of the title V, Energy and Natural Resources Provisions, chapter 4—Federal Oil and Gas Royalties as part of the Balanced Budget Act of 1995.

This chapter is the only legislative initiative taken during the last 13 years to cost effectively increase the Nation's third largest source of revenue—oil and gas royalties. This chapter establishes a comprehensive statutory plan to increase, not decrease, collection of royalty receipts due the United States. In short, it reduces the deficit. Without this chapter as part of the Seven Year Balanced Budget Act of 1995, an ineffective and costly royalty collection system will prevail, perpetuating long delays and uncollected royalties.

To increase royalty collections to reduce the deficit, the chapter:

First, requires the Secretary and delegated States to collect and protect all royalty claims within 6 years. To ensure full and complete collection of all receipts, extension of the 6-year period is permitted and lessees are required to provide records necessary for proper collection;

Second, requires the Secretary to increase the value of disputed claims by deciding appeals within 30 months that will result in additional royalty collections. Today, over $450 million of disputed claims languish in a bureaucratic appeal process and continue to lose value;

Third, allows States which receive one-half of royalties collected to protect their interests by performing royalty collection activities in partnership with the Secretary. This partnership increases receipts to both the U.S. Treasury and the States;

Fourth, requires more aggressive and cost-effective royalty collection by the Secretary and the delegated States which will increase the amount of collections within the 6-year period; and,

Fifth, increases oil and gas production on Federal lands by creating economic efficiencies to make Federal leases more competitive with private leases.

The Congressional Budget Office has concluded that these changes increase royalty income over 7 years to the U.S. Treasury by $51 million and another $33 million to the States. Additional royalty collections will continue to occur for each fiscal year after the 7-year period. Collections well in excess of $51 million are likely to occur as the Secretary and States more aggressively collect royalties. Furthermore, net receipts are maximized through increased efficiencies, and production is stimulated under this chapter.

The truth is, the Federal oil and gas royalty chapter makes money, because it makes everybody, lessee and lessor alike, work to collect and pay royalties payments right the first time. And, it empowers the States to do the job on leases within their boundaries to ensure that royalty bills are fully paid on time, and for lower collection costs. The Governors of the two States with the most at stake—Wyoming and New Mexico—support this legislation because it will allow them to do their jobs better, fairer, and less expensively and ensure that this significant source of revenue to the U.S. Treasury and Western States will increase.

Some Democrats oppose this chapter because they would rather promote the status quo to allow bureaucrats an indefinite period of time to pursue money due the taxpayers. In spite of the positive CBO score, these same opponents claim royalties will be lost, but in truth, royalty collections will increase. States will have a more direct role, thereby increasing collections to use for funding schools, highways, and social programs.

There has been many allegations about chapter four which are false and been used in attempt to divert attention from the provisions of this chapter which increase royalty collections, eliminate ineffective and costly administrative actions and allows States to form a partnership with the Secretary to participate in activities that directly impact the royalties they received from Federal leases. As part of the record, I would like to clarify the intent of various provisions of this chapter. This chapter in no way affects Indian lands or alters how the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982 applies to Indian lands.

The intent of specific section of this chapter includes:

SEC. 5361. DEFINITIONS

Definitions are contained in this section to provide guidance and clarity. Many of the definitions are critical to the underlying concepts. Under the provisions of the chapter, the definitions apply to Federal lands and Outer Continental Shelf lands, and in no way shall be applied to Indian lands.

The term "obligation" includes all of the duties which arise under a lease issued by the Government. A "lessee" is the person having a contractual relationship with the Federal Government. A "delegated State" defines activities, unless prohibited by the Constitution, a State may choose to perform pursuant to the terms and conditions of an agreement between the State and the Secretary to promote production and increase royalties received by the State and the U.S. Treasury. A "State concerned" is a State that receives a portion of the Federal royalties for Federal lands lying within the boundaries of the State and shall have an equal role with the Secretary in deciding the applicable provisions of the chapter. The term "order to pay" has been expressly defined. The committee believes that the information contained in this definition is necessary information for the tolling of the 6-year period.

SEC. 5362 MAXIMIZING RECEIPTS THROUGH STATE EFFORTS

This entire chapter establishes a partnership between the Secretary and the States for the purpose of increasing royalty collections. This section is necessary to expand existing authority for States to perform all or a part of the activities under this chapter to ensure additional collections to the States and the U.S. Treasury within 6-year period. By expanding the States' role, States are provided the economic incentive to be more aggressive under the net receipts sharing provision of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act to collect new receipts to the States and U.S. Treasury. States receive 50 percent of all royalties received under Federal onshore oil and gas leases.

States currently may perform certain royalty audit activities if they enter into an agreement with the Secretary. This section allows a State to enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary to perform legally delegable royalty and lease management activities. If a Federal activity is not deemed to be inherently Federal and can be performed in a manner with the efficient and timely collections of royalty requirements of this section, an interested State may pursue an agreement with the Secretary to perform such activity and funding shall be consistent with current delegation of authority agreements. If an activity is determined to not be constitutionally delegable to a State, it shall not impact any other delegable activity or provision of this chapter. A State's compensation to perform delegated activities shall be subject to net receipt sharing, and the State shall receive compensation for State costs allocated to a State's net receipts during the following fiscal year. As of the date of enactment, existing State delegation agreements to perform audits or inspections, nothing under this chapter shall impair those agreements. All State actions must conform with the provisions of this chapter.

SEC. 5363. SECRETARIAL AND DELEGATED STATES' ACTIONS AND LIMITATION PERIODS

This section requires collection of royalties and enforcement of royalty claims within 6 years. This 6-year period is the key component of this chapter because it is the driving mechanism to increase revenues to the U.S. Treasury and the States. To determine the amount owing, this section requires companies to provide records during the 6-year period and provides the Secretary and States a mechanism to toll the statute and protect collections if records are not made available. To ensure timely collections, the Debt Collection Act applies to obligations that are enforced during the 6-year period.

The Secretary and the delegated States are required to perform cost-effective collections in order to have sufficient resources to increase collections during the 6-year period. The Secretary and the State concerned are required to determine what Federal accounting and collection activities cannot be performed cost effectively and eliminate redundant auditing efforts.

This section also requires the Secretary to decide and initiate collection of royalties from appealed claims within 2½ years and provides a framework for settlement of litigated cases. All appeals decided by the Secretary shall be binding on the State. The requirement is a necessary part of this section's purpose, which is to ensure collection of all disputed royalty amounts due the United States, thereby increasing revenues to the U.S. Treasury within the 6-year period. It eliminates losses associated with stale and uncollectible claims.

SEC. 5364. ADJUSTMENT AND REFUNDS

In order to ensure that additional royalties are collected within the 6-year period, all adjustments to royalty payments are required to be made within 5 years. A key component of additional royalties being cost-effectively collected within the 6 years is the requirement that interest be calculated and paid at the time of any adjustment.

SEC. 5365. ROYALTY TERMS AND CONDITIONS, INTEREST, AND PENALTIES

This section creates an analogous system to the IRS for interest on overpaid and underpaid royalties, thereby encouraging royalties to be paid accurately the month following the month of production. The interest rate for under payments will be short term rate plus three points and for overpayments the interest rate will be the short term rate plus two points, regardless of the amounts of the underpayment or overpayment. Increased receipts to the U.S. Treasury and the States are achieved by the establishment of a more efficient and cost-effective accounting system which is necessary so that royalties paid can be verified within the limitation period. This section also imposes a new statutory assessment on lessees who chronically submit erroneous reports, thereby encouraging proper payment and increasing revenues. These are the only type of assessments that can be imposed by the Secretary.

If the Secretary determines that a lessee has paid in excess of 10 percent of its total royalty obligation for all of its leases subject to this act and further determines that such excessive payment was made for the sole purpose of receiving interest, the Secretary shall not pay interest on the amounts paid in excess of 10 percent. The committee expects lessees to place excess cash in other interest-bearing accounts rather than with the Minerals Management Service and hence a determination by the Secretary that an overpayment was made for the sole purpose of receiving interest shall be the exception.

Lessees will be allowed to submit an appropriate amount of royalties to avoid underpayment or nonpayment interest charges. When an estimated payment is made, the royalty payment becomes due at the end of the month following the period covered by the estimated payment. The committee does not intend to restrict the period of time covered by an estimate to 30 days.

This section provides that the lessee clarify who is responsible for the payment of royalties and notify the Secretary. The committee intends to eliminate the delay in collection of these royalties because the Secretary will contact only those parties that are liable, or designated to be liable, to remit royalty. The Interior Board of Land Appeals Mesa decision demonstrates that the Secretary's current royalty collection practices must be altered to comply with the law. This section does not reduce the Secretary's ability to accept payment from any party or their ability to pursue parties who are secondarily liable.

To ensure proper collections, this provision clarifies which party is primarily liable for the underlying royalty obligation, which is consistent with lease terms. The provision does not alter or restrict a lessee designation of who may report and pay royalties on their behalf.

SEC. 5366. ALTERNATIVES FOR MARGINAL PROPERTIES

Regulatory relief and other options to conventional and costly royalty accounting are established for marginal wells to increase royalties and provide the Secretary and States additional resources to aggressively collect royalties from more prolific properties within the 6-year period. This reform for marginal (low production) properties results in additional receipts from oil and gas production that would otherwise be abandoned. This section increases oil and gas production on Federal lands by creating economic efficiencies to make Federal leases more competitive with private leases.

This section requires the Secretary and the State concerned to determine the amount of what marginal production from a lease or leases or well or wells will be subject to a prepayment or regulatory relief. If a State concerned does not consent, the prepayments or regulatory relief cannot be made.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Seven Year Balanced Budget Act of 1995. The Federal oil and gas royalty chapter is sound.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EMERSON). Pursuant to House Resolution 279, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOBSON].

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 245, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Members will record their votes by electronic device.

Without objection, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device may be taken on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment to House Joint Resolution 122 on which the Chair has postponed further proceedings.

There was no objection.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 235, nays 192, not voting 5, as follows:

MOSLEM FUNDAMENTALISTS POSE THREAT IN BOSNIA

(Mr. CUNNINGHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I know the theme today is about the budget, but we have something even more pressing, I think. Right now, in Ohio, our national leaders are worrying about a peace process, and this House voted not to allow 25,000 troops to go.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, Republicans and Democrats, if now that the peace can be signed, with the backing of the President, with the backing of the House, with the backing of the Senate and the American people, Republicans and Democrats, can you imagine the peace and the strength that will come out of that with those negotiators knowing that 25,000 troops are not included, but the American people and this body is behind them?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for the RECORD a statement by Abu Al-Ma'ali. The real threat are the 400,000 Moslem fundamentalists. The Bosnian Moslems are not the fundamentalists. The problem is from Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following for the RECORD, showing what the real threat to our troops would be:

Citing the religious-ideological sermons recently delivered in the Mujahedin Brigade. Abu Al-Ma'ali stressed that it was inconceivable that the Islamist forces would ever cooperate in a meaningful way with Croat, Serb, or Western forces * * * "We know that we will have a day in which to fight the Jews, and the Almighty will grant us victory, and also we know that the best soldiers will fight the Christians and all of these are promises and rejoices from the Messenger of Allah. So why do you think that victory would not come to Muslims from Allah. We do not believe in worshipping any one but Allah, we disbelieved in the U.S. and its allies, we disbelieved in transgressors and their religion which they invented and we have relied only on Allah.

Abu Al-Ma'ali reaffirms that the Mujahedin "are continuing on our path, until Allah opens the way from us with those unbelievers," so that the Islamist victory could be completed.

It did not take long for Abu Al-Ma'ali to clarify what he meant On September 27, 1995, the Muhahedin Brigade issued an Urgent Communique called "European Mujahedin Call to Muslims!", which amounts to a call for a worldwide jihad.

* * * "To all of you Muslims of the world we send you our greetings carrying the scents of victory and the joy of Mujahedin so that you share with us the victories of Muslims and their power under the banner of blessed Jihad.

"To all of you Muslims of the world we send you our appeal which we have repeated and are still repeating: To rise up in support of your brothers, and remove the obstacles [to the rule of Islam] from around you.

"We send you our greetings in this victory despite the plots of the enemies and the unbelievers in an evil attempt to suppress these successes and conquests in order to claim it for themselves.

"These attempts are led by the U.S. and the Crusade West, so be aware of the plots of the enemies of Allah and their hate of Islam and Muslims, and Allah is well aware of what they do."

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EMERSON). Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

WHAT THE AGREEMENT TO BALANCE THE BUDGET IN 7 YEARS MEANS FOR AMERICA'S FUTURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments tonight to talk about the significance of what has gone on this past weekend. As many people in the House know, as everyone in the House knows, we have had a partial shutdown of the Government. Last evening there was an agreement reached by the President and leaders in both the Senate and the House and we have been able to restart the Government and postpone any shutdown until December 15.

The agreement on the continuing resolution was that we would, in fact, balance the budget not later than the year 2002, and that we would use the Congressional Budget Office figures. We also went on to list a series of items that are of priority for both sides of the aisle in the House and the Senate, as well as the President, and we will work toward getting those priorities established through the debate process, some of which I would like to start this evening.

As we all know from November 8, 1994, we have been given marching orders from the American people. Many people ran in their campaigns and wanted to talk about various issues that were important to them. It was picked up by members of the public and those individuals who expounded on those issues, such as a balanced budget, were elected to this Congress.

We have, over the course of the last year, been working toward that balanced budget. But just as a review, what we have been given as marching orders are in the accompanying chart I have, which says, basically, Congress is to balance the budget in 7 years, to save Medicare from bankruptcy, to reform welfare, and to provide tax relief for families and job creation.

Those are the priorities that I believe, Mr. Speaker, are from the American public. Those are the priorities that we are going to work toward over this next month, next 3 weeks, and, hopefully, into the next year. And perhaps as we carry out this effort to balance the budget by the year 2002, we are going to achieve these goals on our route to a balanced budget and securing our future.

Mr. Speaker, people have said why should we balance the budget, and we have told people it is important because of our children, and I think that is true. And the reason I do is because our debt is so significant. I brought another chart just to list the amount of the Federal debt.

As of November 8, our Federal debt, this is November 8, 1995, our Federal debt is $4,985,913,011,032.65. Now, that is a tremendous amount of money.

To give people a perspective as to how much money that is. If an individual had gone into business the day Christ rose from the dead, and they lost a million dollars that day, and the following day, and every day of the week, and every week of the month, and every year for almost 2,000 years, they would only be one-fifth of the way to losing $4.9 trillion.

Most of us think a million dollars would be a sufficient amount of money to perhaps retire on. To think of losing that amount of money each day for almost 2,000 years and not even getting one-fifth of the way to losing what we have currently as our Federal debt gives us an idea of how much money that is.

For a child born this year, it would amount to about $187,000 in the form of taxes just to pay the interest on this debt, if we are unable to balance in 7 years.

□ 1845

Next year, in fiscal year 1997, the interest on the loan, on this debt, the national debt, the interest will exceed every other expenditure except for Social Security. It will be more than we spend on the Army and the Navy and the Marines and the Air Force and the Department of Defense structure, the intelligence-gathering community. The entire Department of Defense budget will be secondary to the amount we pay on interest on the debt, with Social Security being the only one we expend more on.

With all of that going toward interest, we do nothing to meet the needs of the poor; we do nothing to meet the nutrition programs. We do nothing to provide part B Medicare support. Nothing on Medicaid. Only interest on the debt.

It is a tremendous problem that we must deal with and solve, and we do that by balancing the budget. When we establish priorities toward getting to that balanced budget, we are going to have to deal with a lot of disinformation that is flowing. One, we have heard that we are trying to balance the budget on the backs of the poor, and the earned income tax credit has been drastically cut. But, Mr. Speaker, between 1995, this year, this fiscal year, in which we are spending $19.85 billion, by 2002, in the budget that we just passed tonight, we plan on spending $25.4 billion by that year. That is an increase. From 19.85 to 25.4, an increase, and yet we have heard that it is a cut and that we are trying to cut individuals to balance the budget. Mr. Speaker, only in Washington, DC, is that called a cut.

The school lunch programs, we saw last spring, the President go to an elementary school and state that the budget that was before the Congress was going to take food away from these children, that they would be starving.

Well, I have visited some of the elementary schools in Wichita, KS, in my district, the Dodge-Edison School, and there were no reports of children starving at that institution, nor at any school in Kansas or any school across the Nation. In fact, the budget that we passed tonight allows for $6.3 billion to go to school lunches this year. It will grow. It will increase to $7.8 billion by 2002.

Mr. Speaker, I want to close tonight by saying that we must establish priorities, we must balance the budget in 7 years, and I am pleased to be able to work toward that effort.

IS BOSNIA WORTH DYING FOR?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, we theoretically were supposed to adjourn the first week in October. Theoretically, all 13 major appropriation spending bills finished before that in sequence. Everything would have been authorized in the U.S. House. The Money House, the most important among equals around here in the separation of powers between the Supreme Court, the executive branch, the White House, and the Congress.

We are the first among equals. That is the way it was designed by our Founders, by the Framers of the Constitution. Between this House and the Chamber at the north end of the building, the U.S. Senate, we are the ones who control the power of the purse. The right to tax and the right to spend starts here.

The whole authorization, to appropriations to conference with the Senate process, is completely convoluted and all mixed up. Now, we are going out for 7¾ days, and the talks involving a war criminal from Belgrade at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base are breaking down.

Meanwhile, in Germany the 1st Armored Division over there is being trained to be ready to go in 48 to 72 hours and start sending thousands of men into Bosnia and Herzegovina without the consultation with the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives and without Clinton having made his case.

Mr. Speaker, here it is in one sentence on the cover of today's brand-new Time magazine. The face of a typical handsome young soldier and it says, "Is Bosnia Worth Dying For?"

Mr. Speaker, I did not get a chance during the brief debate on Friday to read a letter, which I meant to put in the RECORD and inadvertently forgot, a letter to the editor that I think says it all. It is from the Wall Street Journal of 6 days ago, November 14. It is about somebody who is experienced, Philip Merrill, a former Assistant Secretary General of NATO, and this article about says it all.

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker: "The Clinton administration is still apparently planning to insert 25,000," now they say 20,000, "American troops into Bosnia with no clear military objective, no definition of victory and no exit strategy," a huge mistake.

Jumping forward to the middle of the article, which I ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD in its totality, listen to this: "This is not to say there is no moral issue in Bosnia." I also believe there is a moral issue. There is especially the atrocities, mostly Serb atrocities. "We can best help the Bosnians by making sure their 120,000-man army fight for itself."

"It's very doubtful that the Balkans can sustain a multiethnic society of the kind envisioned by Clinton. The U.S. has no strategic stake in this fight and cannot and should not be the military arbiter."

"Our future policy seems to be," listen, Mr. Speaker, and any American following this Chamber, about 1,300,000 of our fellow Americans, listen to this: We seem to be simultaneously threatening Serbs from the air and killing them. We are in hiatus on that. We are going to act as a peacekeepers on the ground; at the same time train the Croatian Army, which I just came back from witnessing in August; arm the Bosnian military, which is what the leader in the Senate wants to do, and I do not have much argument with that, we voted overwhelmingly in the House to do that; and at the same time indict Bosnian Serb war criminals and a couple of Croatian war criminals. The Croatians have been turned over. The Bosnians, including three senior army officers, have all been promoted and are not being turned over. There are now over 54 or 54 war criminals involved in this; almost all of them Bosnian Serbs. No Moslems have been indicted yet.

Any one of those policies is in itself coherent and defensible. Taken together they are incoherent. As flare-ups occur, these inherently conflicting policies will leave us powerless to act effectively.

Look at article 10, and I will put all 10 in the RECORD. Look at my 10th commendment that I have sent to every Member in this House over the last 3 years: Thou shalt not commit U.S. combat forces unless the Commander in Chief, that is Clinton, and Congress, that is us, can explain to the loved ones of any killed or wounded American soldier, sailor, Marine, pilot, or aircrewman why their family member or friend was sent in harm's way.

Mr. Speaker, listen to the close of Mr. Merrill's article, and I will end on one sentence, Mr. Speaker. Should Clinton send American troops into Bosnia without congressional approval, he should be impeached. When the body bags start coming home, it will be a disaster, and that means anybody in this House or Senate that let it happen. I will draw articles of impeachment the minute a man or woman is killed in Bosnia.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following for the RECORD:

1. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless the situation is vital to U.S. or allied national interests.

What vital interests are at stake? We already are preventing the spread of conflict with troops elsewhere in the Balkins such as Macedonia.

2. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless all other options already have been used or considered.

What about lifting the arms embargo? What about tightening trade sanctions? What about further air strikes?

3. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless there is a clear commitment, including allocated resources, to achieving victory.

Are 25,000 U.S. troops enough? Are there enough European forces?

4. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless there are clearly defined political and military objectives.

What are the political objectives—protect small "enclaves" in the middle of a civil war? What are the military objectives—seize and hold specific terrain or stand and become targets for all warring sides?

5. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless our commitment of these forces will change if our objectives change.

Will we realistically be able to withdraw U.S. forces after a year if peace is not achieved, even is these forces are directly engaged in combat?

6. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless the American people and Congress support the action.

Neither Congress nor the American people support this operation. A recent CBS/New York Times poll indicated only 37% of Americans support the President's position on Bosnia. Further, 79% believe he should seek approval from Congress before sending any troops.

7. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless under the operational command of American commanders or allied commanders under a ratified treaty.

The command structure for U.S. troops involved in this operation seems confused at best with U.S. ground troops serving under deputy European commanders and a NATO council representatives from member states. Will France and Denmark have to approve U.S. combat requests for M–1 tanks & AC–130 gunships?

8. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless properly equipped, trained and maintained by the Congress.

Why has the President nearly doubled the defense cuts he promised in his campaign and under funded his own "Bottom Up Review" defense plan by as much as $150 billion? Shouldn't he restore spending if he plans to use our military as world policemen in Bosnia, Haiti, and elsewhere?

9. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless there is substantial and reliable intelligence information including human intelligence.

What reliable hunint intelligence sources do we have in Bosnia? Will our sources be compromised through intelligence sharing agreements with non-NATO countries such as Russia?

10. Thou shall not commit U.S. combat forces unless the commander in chief and Congress can explain to the loved ones of any killed or wounded American soldier, sailor, Marine, pilot or aircrewman why their family member or friend was sent in harm's way.

Can we honestly make this case? What do we now tell the families of those killed in Somalia? American lives are at stake!

[From the Wall Street Journal, Nov. 14, 1995]

BOSNIA: WE SHOULDN'T GO

(By Philip Merrill)

The Clinton administration is still apparently planning to insert 25,000 American troops into Bosnia with no clear military objective, no definition of victory and no exit strategy. That would be a huge mistake.

All the parties have coveted each other's assets for a thousand years. In the unlikely event that there is a real peace settlement, American troops are not necessary. If there is no agreement for peace, or a deal falters, American soldiers, like their British and French counterparts, will be hostages to ethnic hatreds.

Once U.S. troops are deployed, it will be in the Bosnian interest to keep them there. The Bosnians will find ways to ensure that enough Americans are killed and the Serbs and Croats are blamed for it. Serbs and Croats will retaliate in kind. Our soldiers will be caught in a deadly and deceptive cross-fire.

To mainain 25,000 Americans under combat conditions would require a rotation of troops in and out of Bosnia. The U.S. Army has only 10 active divisions. A Bosnian deployment could mean that some 40% of our Army would be coming, going, or on the ground in Bosnia, a diversion of people and money that is wildly disproportionate to our strategic interest in the Balkans.

The disastrous result could mean a retreat from Europe, the collapse of NATO, a failure to deal with longer term but more dangerous threats elsewhere, and immeasurable costs as the law of unintended consequences comes into play.

The root problem, more evident every day, is that the Clinton administration, while well-intentioned, has no concept of how, when, or why to use military force. It is preparing to enter Bosnia only because of essentially offhand promises from a president who has no idea of America's role in a post-Cold War world. Our foreign policy objectives should relate far more to integrating Russia and China into the community of civilized nations than to involving ourselves in the ethnic and religious feuds of Eastern Europe.

This is not to say there is no moral issue in Bosnia. There is—especially the Serb atrocities. We can best help the Bosnians by making sure their 120,000 man army can fight for itself.

It's very doubtful that the Balkans can sustain a multiethic society of the kind envisioned by President Clinton. The U.S. has no strategic stake in this fight and cannot and should not be the military arbiter.

Our future policy seems to be to simultaneously threaten Serbs from the air, act as peacekeepers on the ground, train the Croatian army, arm the Bosnia military, conduct peace negotiations and indict Bosnian Serb war Criminals. Any one of those policies is defensible; taken together they're incoherent. As flare-ups occur, these inherently conflicting policies will leave us powerless to act effectively.

The European attitude toward the Balkans—which essentially is a willingness to fight to the last American—is not encouraging. The Germans, for example, are willing to put up 5,000 troops—but only for Croatia, not Bosnia. They know they cannot do what the Romans, Frederick the Great and nine Nazi divisions could not do—pacify the Balkans.

To endorse the president's policy comes close to an act of murder of young Americans who have sworn allegiance to our country but who will serve and die under circumstances that will neither advance U.S. interests nor the cause of freedom.

When the American body bags start coming home, it will be a political disaster for those who did not oppose sending troops to Bosnia. Should President Clinton send Americans into Bosnia without congressional approval, he should be impeached.

The time to face the choice is now, before we enter this war and before American blood is shed.

Mr. Speaker, here is the Dornan-Doolittle language from H.R. 1530.

SUBTITLE A—PEACEKEEPING PROVISIONS

SECTION 1201—LIMITATION ON EXPENDITURE OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FUNDS FOR UNITED STATES FORCES PLACED UNDER UNITED NATIONS COMMAND OR CONTROL

Presidential Decision Directive 25 (PDD-25) signed by President Clinton in May of 1994 contains a number of policy initiatives intended to promote peacekeeping as an important instrument of the Administration's national security policy. Summary documents and extensive public and private briefings on this policy initiative, make clear to the committee that the Administration has adopted a policy of allowing the placement of U.S. armed forces under the operational control of foreign commanders when engaged in peacekeeping operations.

The Administration continues to stress that the President will retain "command" of U.S. forces at all times. However, the usage of the term "command" in this context refers to the administrative control of military forces which has never been an issue of debate or contention. On the other hand, the practice of ceding "operational control" of U.S. military forces to non-U.S. commanders remains a highly controversial and troubling policy. While certain U.S. military units have operated under the operational control of other nations, these instances have been rare and usually as part of larger coalition military operations where the U.S. retains overall operational command of the theater of operation. Further, these instances occurred during traditional military operations that allowed a high degree of planning and coordination to minimize the inherent complications resulting from mixed command chains.

By contrast, the concept of ceding operational control of U.S. forces to a United Nations peacekeeping command is a relatively recent practice that has thus far yielded decidedly mixed results. As demonstrated during the UNOSOM II operation in Somalia, peacekeeping operations place a high premium on the ability to rapidly employ effective military force in response to unplanned circumstances. The tactical demands of such operations tend to stress and exacerbate the limitations of mixed-nationality operations resulting from the usually significant cultural, language, doctrine, and training differences among the participating national contingents. While only U.S. logistics forces were placed under UN operational control during UNOSOM II, the unanimous view of U.S. commanders interviewed by the committee during its review of the Somalia operation was that UN mixed-nationality command chains are inappropriate for demanding UN operations.

Therefore, the committee recommends a provision (sec. 1201) that would regulate the circumstances under which the President could commit U.S. forces under UN command or control. This provision would require that before U.S. forces may be deployed under the command or operational control of the UN, the President must first certify to the Congress that (1) such a command arrangement is necessary to protect U.S. national security interests, (2) the commander of the U.S. force involved will retain the right to report independently to U.S. military authorities and to decline to comply with orders judged to be illegal, militarily imprudent or beyond the mandate of the U.S. mission, (3) the U.S. force involved will remain under U.S. administrative command, and (4) the U.S. will retain the authority to withdraw the U.S. force involved and take action it considers necessary to protect this force if it is engaged.

While this provision seeks to ensure that any deployment of U.S. forces under UN command or control is made with a clear and unambiguous understanding of the right of the United States to withdraw those forces at any time and to take any action considered necessary to protect such forces, the committee recognizes that any such decision to withdraw deployed U.S. forces should be made with due regard and consideration for the safety of U.S. and other national contingents deployed in any such given operation.

The provision would further require the President to submit a report along with the aforementioned certification providing: (1) a description of the national security interests that require such a command arrangement, (2) the mission of the U.S. forces involved, (3) the expected size and composition of the U.S. forces involved, (4) the incremental cost to the U.S. of participation in the operation, (5) the precise command and control relationship between the U.S. forces and the United Nations command structure, (6) the precise command and control relationship between the U.S. forces involved and the U.S. unified commander for the region in which the forces will be operating, (7) the extent to which the U.S. forces involved will be relying on non-U.S. forces for self protection, and (8) the timetable for the complete withdrawal of the U.S. forces involved.

Mr. Speaker consider this Time magazine title "Is Bosnia Worth Dying For?" and these few excerpts from this cover story, of November 27, 1995.

Is the soldier on the cover SP4 Andrew F. Hawley; just another faceless U.S. soldier—No.

1 of 25,000 or 20,000 "American" troops to be sent to Bosnia under "Bill Clinton" foreign policy

He could easily be another Randy Shugart or Gary Gordon, soldiers who gave their lives in Somalia

He could be another "Specialist" Michael New who refuses to serve under U.N. command or U.N. uniform

He could be your husband, or your brother, or your son, going to a place far away to risk his life, not in "peacekeeping" but combat, where we have no vital national security interests, no specific military objectives, and no clear exit strategy.

What are we going to do about it?

The House has passed binding legislation, cosponsored by myself and JOEL HEFLEY of Colorado to prevent any funds from being spent on such a troop deployment until authorized by Congress.

Our National Security Committee has also passed binding legislation by myself and JOHN DOOLITTLE of California that would strictly limit U.N. command of United States troops, which resulted in the death of 19 United States soldiers in Somalia.

But where's the Senate? No binding Bosnia deployment bill. No binding language on U.N. command. We need your help America. Let the Senate know that we do not want troops deployed to Bosnia, at least until the President has made his case to Congress, and we certainly do not want our troops under U.N. command at any time.

COALITION BUDGET IS THE PLACE TO BEGIN NEGOTIATING FOR A BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROEMER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, about 17 minutes ago, we passed through this body a continuing resolution that will fund Government, reopen Government, and fund it until December 15. It was very important to pass this because the American people, I think, have spoken very, very loudly through the last year and the last several years for Congress to work together; to not engage in gridlock, in posturing and political partisanship and blame games and ultimately deadlock. For us to pass, in a bipartisan way with an overwhelming vote, legislation that not only reopens Government, but establishes some parameters for us to move forward and negotiate a balanced budget agreement for the next 7 years; to achieve a balanced budget by the year 2002.

Many of us, Mr. Speaker, worked together over the course of the last few weeks, particularly late last week, to try to forge a consensus, a commonsense middle ground restart to these negotiations that seem to be stalled for a host of reasons.

Mr. Speaker, we are delighted that the parties came to an agreement over the weekend. I want to commend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON], a Republican, who I worked very closely with in circulating a letter that was signed by 50 Republicans, and we were able to achieve 50 Democratic signatures.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LARGENT] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUPAK] also worked on very similar language to try to get the House to help the leadership to move forward on this bipartisan agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I would salute the President and Mr. Panetta at the White House for their hard work, and I would also salute the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KASICH and Senator DOMENICI for their very hard work in carefully negotiating this pact over the last few days.

Mr. Speaker, the hard work is ahead of us. The hard work, once we have established these parameters to try to balance this budget in the next 7 years, is just starting. I would recommend that the starting place, Mr. Speaker, be the coalition budget, the only budget that has received bipartisan votes on this floor, where over 300 people have voted for a blanced budget plan over the last 2 months.

This plan achieves a balanced budget by the year 2002. It does it in a fair way with equitable outcomes. It says to the American people we all have to participate in the sacrifice of balancing the budget. But it also says to the politicians and the people in Washington, we are not going to pander for votes. We are not going to provide tax cuts 30 days out from an election, or to the tune of $245 billion, that we must then cut education and farm programs to pay for. We are going to do this by balancing the budget first and then providing tax cuts later.

I think this is a reasonable, prudent, fair budget agreement, Mr. Speaker, and I would encourage this body to start with the coalition budget, which is a bipartisan budget, to move us forward in the next few weeks toward December 15, to a goal that I think 85 percent of the American people want us to achieve, and that is balancing this budget.

It is going to be a very difficult task. It is going to be a very arduous task, but if we continue to work in a bipartisan way for fairness and not devastating Medicare programs, and for opportunity where we provide for education, for student loans, and in terms of providing a father to our children, by not cutting too deeply into programs so that farm can be passed on to the next generation of young Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that coalition budget achieves that. I think that coalition budget is the place to start, and I think that coalition budget has the best opportunity to bring America together to make sure that we balance this budget in the next 7 years and to have fair, equitable outcomes.

AMERICA HAS MUCH TO BE THANKFUL FOR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, at this time of Thanksgiving week have we much to be thankful for. In looking over the legislation which has been adopted by this House, we only have to look to the line-item veto, which will cut out the pork-barrel legislation that has wasted so much in prior Congresses.

We have to look just to the accountability law, sometimes called the Shays Act, which will force Congress to live under the laws that they pass for others. The prohibition of unfunded mandates. No longer will Congress be able to pass laws that, in fact, have local governments and State governments unnecessarily foot the entire bill. Now, if the Federal Government, through the House and the Senate and the President, wish the local governments to do something, the funding will have to follow.

We also passed historic legislation last week with my support, and all the other colleagues in this body. I think it was almost unanimous that we passed the House rule which will ban gifts from lobbyists. There is no way that our constituents feel that we should have gifts from lobbyists and now we have legislation which will prohibit it, and properly so.

But I am pleased to see tonight that we have the spirit of bipartisanship and we now have the President and Congress working together to achieve a balanced budget within 7 years. Under that specific language, the President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the first session of the 104th Congress to achieve a balanced budget not later than fiscal year 2002, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office, and the President and the Congress agree that the balanced budget must protect future generations, ensure Medicare solvency, reform welfare, and provide adequate funding for Medicaid, education, agriculture, national defense, veterans, and the environment.

□ 1900

It further stipulates that the balanced budget shall be estimated by the Congressional Budget Office figures. I think it is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that by balancing the budget we will help all American families by reducing mortgage costs, reducing car payments, reducing tuitions costs, and as well stabilizing health care costs.

It should also be brought out to the attention of my colleagues that the proposed Balanced Budget Act passed by the House for 1995 includes important increases from 1995 to 2002 in the following ways: The earned income tax credit will go from almost $19.9 billion to $25.4 billion. The School Lunch Program nationally would go up from $6.3 billion to $7.8 billion. Student loans would go up from $24.5 billion to $36.5 billion. Medicaid will go up from $89.2 billion to $127.3 billion. Medicare will increase from $178.1 billion to $289.8 billion, and veterans' benefits will go from $36.9 billion to $41.8 billion.

So it is a case, Mr. Speaker, of promises made, promises kept. This Congress is moving forward in a bipartisan fashion. And in the spirit of Thanksgiving, I know that each of us can do our best to remove the personalities from the issues and restore the fiscal responsibility of the country by working on policies that Republicans and Democrats can embrace together to bring about the fiscal responsibility to make sure we live within our budgets as families do, as States do, as counties do.

We can work together to make sure that the vital programs of the Federal Government must provide, because State governments and the private sector do not provide them, but do so in a way that removes the waste, fraud, and abuse. If we do that, I know we can achieve the kinds of legislation and the kinds of services the American public wants and deserves.

ON THE BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARR). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. KIM] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KIM. Mr. Speaker, I believe today is a truly historic day. For the first time in 30 years, that is right, in 30 years, Congress finally passed a genuine balanced budget plan. For over 30 years, the American people have heard nothing but hot air and hollow promises about the balanced budget.

This is my second term. I remember hearing all the promises to balance the budget at the beginning of the year. And then at the end of the year, they always have some excuse for running a deficit. And the Government was always in the red and they were always blaming someone else, pointing the finger at each other. I knew that if I ran my business like this, I would be bankrupt a long time ago, but Government just kept printing more money and more money and adding to our national debt.

This is very dangerous for the future generation, future economic security of our Nation. Why? As a result of all these deficits, we now have a national debt of close to $5 trillion. The interest payment alone on this debt alone is about the same as what we spend on national defense.

Let us take a look at this chart. The blue line is the train of national debt. It looks fine until about 1980, suddenly going up like crazy, totally runaway, totally out of control. This is our national debt climbing up.

One might ask what is wrong with this. When our national debt, never mind the debt itself, but interest payment is almost 20 percent of entire national budget, then we know we are in serious trouble.

If this continues, we will owe so much money to all the foreign countries, we will have nothing left. Somebody has to pay off this debt in the future. You cannot borrow something without paying back.

What we are trying to do under this balanced budget resolution is trying to bring this back, a little bit flatten, and then at the year 2002, at the end of seventh year, flatten. So we spend the exact amount we take in. We still have generated an additional $650 billion during this process. Adding this together, we also raise our debt.

This is what they call a mean-spirited cut? I mean, gutting it. Is this cut to you? Still increase more money, spend more money, but simply a slow rate. How we are going to pay off this debt, I do not know. We will worry about that at the end of 7th year.

This is what we are trying to do is let us not accumulate any more debt. We have a serious problem. I do not know why my friends out there do not recognize the seriousness. That is why I came to Congress, to stop this runaway spending.

I know the choices will be difficult. I know the big government liberals would attack me and other Republicans. I know it. But we are willing to take the heat. We have the courage needed to do what is right for the country. Our job is to fix government, not make a career of being in it.

Last November we Republicans asked the American people to put us in charge of Congress and we would deliver a balanced budget. I am proud to report we did just that tonight. We passed a fair, realistic plan that will balance the budget in 7 years.

Some people have said 7 years is too short. We need 10 years. Some people said, how about 7 years too long. We should balance it within 5 years. President Clinton has repeatedly said somewhere between 6 and 9 years.

We must do it as quickly as we can and CBO score the 7 years. We can do it without hurting vital programs.

We all know that we cannot balance the budget without cutting some programs. However, there is so much waste and fraud going on, wasted duplication that we can almost balance the budget simply by eliminating waste and fraud.

Can you believe this? Consolidating some overlapping programs and streamlining bureaucracies. We have more than 5,000 programs ongoing right now. Nobody knows what program does what. All these overlapping programs must be consolidated. We can eliminate waste and fraud. We can literally balance the budget. That is what we plan to do. All we are trying to do, folks, we are trying to slow down the spending rate. By doing it, we can balance the budget.

At this time I would like to thank the American people. I would like to thank those people in my district. They have been calling me the last few days telling me, hang tough. I am telling you, 85 percent of those people telling me, hang tough, hanging in there. I am glad I did it.

Thank you again, American people. Thank you. God bless you.

VINCE FOSTER INVESTIGATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, over the past couple of years I and some of my colleagues and some staff people have been doing an investigation into the death of Vince Foster who was found at Fort Marcy Park a year ago July. It was in 1993, 2 years ago in July. And over the past couple of years we have researched, we have looked into the Fiske report.

We have gone out to Fort Marcy Park. We have talked to numerous people who were witnesses or not witnesses to his death but were at Fort Marcy Park and we found some startling things. One of the things that has really bothered a number of us in the past couple of months is that we found out, when we looked at the report that was filed by the FBI, that there are some severe inconsistencies.

The man who found Vince Foster's body, who was called the confidential witness, was alleged to have said in the FBI report that when he found Vince Foster's body he looked directly into the face, specifically observing that the eyes of his body were partially open and slightly glazed and that traces of dry black blood were running from the side of the mouth and nose down the right side of his face.

When I talked to the confidential witness, he swore under oath before a court reporter that there was no blood on the side of the man's face. You might say that might be just a mistake. But the report went on, he further advised that there were traces of blood stains on the shirt to include the upper right shoulder area, along with traces of what he considered to be vomit or spilled wine, possibly purplish in color. He says there was no blood on his shirt, that there was no blood on the side of his face and no blood on his shirt, and he told the FBI that. Yet the FBI put in a report that there was blood on the side of his face and on his shirt.

Another part of the report says, he further maintained, this is the FBI saying this, he further maintained that he was fixated on the face of the body and did not pay specific attention to body extremities, including the hand. In this regard, he advised he could not remember the exact position of the thumb, stating that while he did not observe a gun, there could have been a gun in his hands.

When this was read to the confidential witness, he went into orbit. He said there is absolutely no question whatsoever that I saw the hands clearly, the thumbs were out, the palms were up and there was no gun in the hands. He said, I was right there. I looked right down in his face, no further than 18 inches from the body. So the FBI, according to him, misstated that.

Now you would say if that was the only problem with the investigation by the FBI, that they may have just made some mistakes, even though there is some glaring ones here.

Then we ran into another witness who was out at the park that same day and an hour earlier. That fellow, when he was there, his name was Patrick Knowlton. He said that when he went into the park he saw a car, a brown car with Arkansas plates, and it was a Honda and that it was an older model.

Yet in the FBI report they say it is a light blue car with Virginia plates. He said, I never said that. I said it was a dark brown car with Arkansas plates and they put it down as a Virginia car with Virginia plates and it is light blue.

He also saw some suspicious people in another car who were doing some things there and they may have been involved in the Foster case. And he said, in the report according to the FBI, he could not further identify this particular individual nor his attire and stated that he would be unable to recognize him in the future. He said that is an absolute lie, because I told the FBI agent specifically I not only could identify him, I could draw a picture of the guy because I would never forget his face. Yet the FBI says he could not identify the gentleman.

Then we go back to the confidential witness. There is another part of the report that says, and the possibility does exist that there was a gun in or near his hands that he might have seen. The confidential witness said that is an absolute lie.

Now, another lady drove up near the park and her car broke down, and it was a Mercedes. When she went into the park to try to find help, she sighted two cars and in her report to the FBI she states the cars were of different color than what she said. She has been contacted.

The interesting thing about all of this is the two FBI agents that did the investigation, gentlemen named Larry Monroe and Bill Colombell. All three of these people say that the report that they gave to the Fiske Commission was wrong, that it was lies.

If one of them was a lie or a mistake, you could understand it or if two of them. But three, these people interviewed three people and there are glaring misrepresentations in these reports.

I have said to the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight here in the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], and to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF], who is also looking into this for the Speaker, that we ought to have those FBI agents come in and explain these inequities and inconsistencies, these inconsistencies in this report, because according to the witnesses who found the body, according to the witnesses who were there, according to the witnesses who saw the cars and the people involved, they say these are out and out lies in these reports.

If the FBI lied to Mr. Fiske or if they were asked to lie to Mr. Fiske, that is a breach of faith. It is something that has misled the American people as to whether or not this may have been a suicide someplace else or maybe even a murder. These things need to be brought to the attention of the American people.

We have, I believe, Mr. Starr, the special counsel or prosecutor, who has been looking into this. it has been brought to his attention. I hope he pursues this and finds out why these FBI agents did not write the report the way the people who found the body and the way the people who were at the park saw it. I think he should ask those FBI agents directly, why did you misrepresent these things in this report?

In addition to that, I believe it is incumbent upon the Congress of the United States and our committee to call these FBI agents in and go ask them directly face to face why these things are inaccurate.

THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I will try not to use the entire hour this evening. But I did want to get to address the House tonight because I do feel that the two major bills or resolutions that we passed today are rather significant.

First of all, the continuing resolution, which, as I think most of us know, allows the Government to continue to operate, prevents the partial shutdown of the Federal Government, which forced many Federal employees to go home and not provide the services that they normally provide to the public.

Second, I would like to address the budget reconciliation or the budget bill that was passed today in final form before it goes to the President, which obviously seeks to plan or map out our budget priorities for the next decade in this Nation.

□ 1915

I have to start out by saying with regard to the continuing resolution and the effort which was successful today to prevent the continued Government shutdown, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to see that it was passed. I think it was very wrong to have the Federal Government partially shut down. There were Federal employees who were home, I guess, for almost a week. They were not working, but of course were going to be paid anyway, and there were many hardships, if you will, for Americans who wanted to sign up for Social Security, for Medicare, for veterans' benefits, those who wanted to join the Army at the recruiting stations; all of these things were prevented over the last few days as we argued in the House and in the Senate over our budget priorities.

As happy as I am over the fact that we were able to come to an agreement on that continuing resolution and the fact that the Government is back to work, I do not think it was necessary to close the Government down, and I hope it does not happen again.

Mr. Speaker, I do not really think that tonight is the place to talk about who to blame, but there is no doubt in my mind that the reason for the partial shutdown was because Speaker GINGRICH and the Republican leadership were determined to impose their own ideology about the budget on the Congress, and on the Democrats, and on the President, and this is really an unprecedented situation. In the past, when we have had disagreements on the budget between Democrats and Republicans or between the President and the Congress, we have not prevented the Government from operating because of our ideological differences.

Essentially what happened today was that the continuing resolution was adopted with language that said that the Congress will try to achieve, and the President will try to achieve, a balanced budget no later than fiscal year 2002, or 7 years from now, and that the balanced budget must protect future generations for such important priorities as Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment, and there are others. Well, if you look at this resolution, what it basically says is that we will adopt, or we will try as a goal, to achieve a 7-year balanced budget, and we will try in the context of that 7-year balanced budget to make sure that we do not cut Medicare, that we do not cut Medicaid too much, that we provide adequate funding for the environment and adequate funding for education.

Well, frankly, Mr. Speaker, we knew that this was the reality a few weeks ago. We all were very much in favor of a balanced budget, and Speaker GINGRICH felt that that budget should be balanced in 7 years. We all were very much in favor of trying to make sure that certain programs were protected, but the President insisted that Medicare, Medicaid, the environment, and educational programs, in particular, be protected.

So, if we knew that 2 weeks ago or 1 week ago, and if those are still the goals that we are trying to achieve, why was it necessary to shut the Government down? It was not, and I hope it does not happen again. I hope that over the next few weeks, as these budget priorities on which there are differences are worked out and negotiated, that we do not find ourselves on December 15 in a situation again where the Speaker and the Republican leadership says, "Look, if you don't meet our goals or our priorities, we are going to shut down the place again." It is not necessary. We can continue to work while we work out our differences over the budget.

Now, the second thing that happened today is that we passed the budget reconciliation or the Republican leadership budget bill. It was passed without the support of most of the Democrats. I opposed it. And the reason why the Democrats, or most of the Democrats, opposed it and the reason why President Clinton opposes it is because it essentially provides tax breaks, if you will, tax cuts or tax breaks, primarily for wealthy Americans to the tune of $245 billion, and it takes those tax breaks basically by cutting funds from Medicare and Medicaid as well as for education and environmental programs.

So what the Democrats are saying, what President Clinton is saying, what I am saying, is that we have to go back; now that this budget has been passed, the President will veto it; we have to go back and negotiate a balanced budget over the next few weeks that will not cut Medicare and Medicaid so severely and that will make sure that there is adequate funding for education and also for the environment.

Just to give you an idea of some of the problems with this budget, when I talk about increased tax breaks for wealthy people, at the same time the budget actually provides tax increases for working people and people at a lower income but who continue to work, and just as an example of that, Mr. Speaker, I have a statement, if you will, or a phrase from the Citizens for Tax Justice which did a distributional analysis of the conference or budget agreement, and it shows the following, that the average tax cut for those in the top 1 percent of taxpayers who get a tax cut would be $15,438, but 99.7 percent of all taxpayers in the bottom fifth would have a tax increase or see no change. For those in this group, who have a tax increase, would see their taxes go up by an average of $173 a year.

So here we have it, really for the first time that I can think of in American history, we are passing a budget that is going to give these tax breaks to wealthy Americans but actually increases taxes on working families or lower income families who are still working and still paying taxes.

Now you might say to yourself how is it there is a tax increase on lower income people. Well, basically the reason for that is because of the cuts in the earned income tax credit.

The earned income tax credit is basically something that was implemented a few years ago in a bipartisan way to try to encourage people to get off welfare and to start working and paying taxes, and so, therefore, people in a lower income bracket who are still working get a tax credit essentially to encourage them to continue working rather than go on the welfare rolls.

Well, right now in this budget, the conference agreement, the changes in the earned income tax credit will basically hurt 4 million childless workers who have incomes less than $9,520. That type of person, the childless worker, if you will, loses up to $324 per year. The cuts in the earned income tax credit affect millions of families with children as well.

For example, it affects families with two or more children who have incomes between $18,000 and $28,000. Some of these families will benefit from the children's tax credit that is in the bill, but not all. Put a different way, those who will get something from the children's credit will have much or all of that benefit taken away by cuts in the earned income tax credit.

Essentially what we are doing here is, while we may be giving some of those low-income people a tax credit because they have children, the tax credit they will lose because of the cut in the earned income tax credit will more than make up for that so they will be paying more in taxes, and if they do not have children, then they are going to lose even more in the tax credit because they do not have the children's credit to make up for it.

Again, I know it is complicated, and sometimes it is difficult to understand, but the bottom line is that, if you are an individual who is making less than $30,000 a year, you are more likely to get a tax increase under this Republican leadership budget than a tax cut.

Now I want to walk briefly though about the main concerns that I have with this budget, this Republican budget, in terms of how it affects Medicare and Medicaid because that is where the deepest cuts take place. Those are the two programs, the two health care programs, that are run by the Government which are most deeply impacted by the priorities in the Republican budget. Medicare, for one, is not abolished. It continues to exist. But the nature of the program changes, and essentially senior citizens are asked to pay more to get less in terms of their health care coverage.

Just as an example of that, the part B premium that seniors now pay for their doctors' care—part A Medicare, part A, takes care of the hospital care; Medicare part B takes care of physicians' care—and seniors pay now a premium per month for Medicare part B. Well, Medicare part B premiums are doubled under this Republican budget proposal. At the same time though that seniors are paying more for their physicians' care under Medicare part B, what is happening is that the amount of money that is available to the Medicare Program, particularly for both hospitals, as well as physicians, is significantly decreased.

Now what that means is that hospitals will not get the same level of reimbursement rate that they need, or that they get now, or will need in the future in order to make ends meet, and so what we are predicting and what we know will happen if you talk to the American Hospital Association, for example, is a lot of hospitals will close, or alternatively they will have to cut back on services, and they are essentially squeezed so that they cannot provide the same quality of care.

I know in my own State of New Jersey we have a large number of hospitals that depend on Medicare and Medicaid for a majority of their income. So if that income is significantly cut back, they either close or they cut back on what they can provide.

The other thing that the budget does with Medicare in a very sort of sneaky way is that right now, if you are a senior citizen, most senior citizens simply go to a doctor of their choice, and that doctor gets reimbursed by the Federal Government in what we call a fee-for-service system. You get the service, the Government pays the fee. Well, what this Republican budget bill does is it changes the emphasis and basically encourages seniors to enroll in HMO's or managed care programs because over the life of the 7-year budget or over the life of the budget essentially the amount of money that is reimbursed to individual physicians as opposed to HMO's is skewed. Higher reimbursement rate, more money going to HMO's or managed care systems, less money as the years go by going to doctors who stay in the traditional fee-for-service system. So essentially seniors are encouraged, or almost forced because of their doctors, into HMO's or managed care systems, and a lot of doctors probably would not even take Medicare any more on an individual basis the way we operate now.

So what I believe will happen, and I think this is what the intent is, is that this budget will increasingly force more and more seniors into HMO's or managed care where they do not have a choice of doctors.

The effect on the other health care program, Medicaid, which is for low-income people, is just as bad, if not even worse, because essentially Medicaid, which right now is a guaranteed program; if you are below a certain income, you get Medicaid, and you have your health insurance paid for by the Federal Government because you cannot work, or you are a child, pregnant woman, whatever, who is without work, or you are disabled; right now that is guaranteed, that you get Medicaid, you get the health care coverage. But this budget bill abolishes the entitlement status of Medicaid. In other words, about 36 million Americans who are now eligible for Medicaid automatically are no longer eligible necessarily, and essentially the States are given money in block grants to try to continue to run health care programs for low-income people. But what the budget does, and again in a very sneaky way, is it says "OK, now the States are going to get money, and they're going to decide what kinds of Medicaid programs they are going to have for low-income people." But 18 percent less is available in Federal dollars, 18 percent less than what our Congressional Budget Office says is necessary in order to cover the people that would be eligible for the Medicaid Program over the next 7 years.

So what is happening here is again just like the squeeze in Medicare, the squeeze exists in Medicaid. States are told, look, it is up to you to decide now who you want to cover, but you are going to get a lot less money to provide that coverage, and you do not have to cover the people that previously were entitled to Medicaid, and so what are the States going to do? They are going to cut back. A lot of them will decide that certain categories of disabled people are not going to be eligible for Medicaid or that certain other people will not be eligible for Medicaid, and they do not really have a choice because their only alternative is to raise taxes somehow, and the States obviously are going to be reluctant to do that.

□ 1930

The other aspect of the Medicaid Program that is particularly damaging is with regard to seniors. I mentioned before that under Medicare, the part B program for Medicare which seniors use to pay for their doctor bills, the premiums are doubled under this budget bill; but on the Medicaid side, the guarantee for low-income seniors, that premium that was paid for by Medicaid is eliminated.

So if you are a senior who can afford to pay for your Medicare coverage, you see your premiums doubled. If you are a senior who right now cannot afford to pay your Medicaid part B premium, and it is covered by Medicaid and you do not have to pay, you now have no guarantee that the Medicare coverage is going to be paid for.

What is going to happen? A lot of senior citizens will simply not take Medicare part B or physician coverage because they cannot afford to pay for the double premium; or, alternatively, if they are too poor and they have had their Medicare part B paid for by Medicaid, they simply will not have Medicare part B coverage, and they will not have any doctors to take care of them.

What we are seeing here more and more with regard to the two health care programs is that the budget, this Republican budget, the budget put forward by Speaker GINGRICH, is going to put a lot more Americans, provide that a lot more Americans do not have health insurance at all. They either will not have physician's coverage, or in some cases they will not have hospital coverage, and we are going to see an increase in the number of Americans who have no health insurance.

Right now it is estimated that something like 40 million Americans have no health insurance. Various estimates, responsible estimates, have said that under this proposal, under this budget, we could easily see over the next 7 years as many as 60 millions Americans or more that will have no health care coverage.

The other aspect of this bill that is particularly troublesome to me when it comes to Medicaid funding, as well as Medicare funding, relates to how States will finance both programs. In other words, right now Medicaid is a program where the States have to put up one dollar for every dollar that the Federal Government provides. So when I say that Medicaid is cut by 8 percent over the next 7 years, I am assuming that a State, for example, my home State of New Jersey, would put up $1 for every $1 that comes from the Federal Government.

But when this budget bill went to conference and came back on an agreement between the House and Senate, I found that it had another provision that even makes the situation for Medicaid and for States that are making an effort to try to provide coverage even worse, because it says that a State only has to spend 40 cents of a dollar in order to get 60 cents in Federal money.

What that means is that instead of putting up $1 and getting $1 in Federal money, the States may decide they will only put up 40 cents and get 60 cents in Federal money, which means that there is only $1 available for Medicaid as opposed to the $2 that is available under the current law. So not only will States see a lot less money coming from the Federal Government, but if they decide that they do not want to put up theirs, there may be half as much money available to the Medicaid recipients in that State than is available right now.

The other thing that really upsets me is that so many times on this floor I have heard the other side, my colleagues on the other side, basically give the impression that somehow, as this bill has moved through committee, through the House, through the Senate, and then in the House and Senate conference until it finally came to the floor today for final consideration before it goes to the President, the suggestion that somehow they have been trying to improve the situation with regard to the States' ability to continue Medicare and Medicaid in an inadequate quality way.

Particularly in my home State of New Jersey, I have been troubled by the fact that, unlike previous to today, most of the Republicans decided to support this budget conference when it came back because of changes that were made supposedly for New Jersey that would help with our ability to continue Medicare and Medicaid coverage.

I basically disagree with what my Republican colleagues or most of my Republican colleagues from New Jersey have been saying in this regard. I think that the bill that has come back to us, and that we voted on today, did not make any real significant changes in the Medicaid or Medicare Programs that help the State of New Jersey. Particularly with regard to our hospitals and the amount of money they are going to be getting from Medicare, it created a very biased system in favor of certain hospitals, and at the expense of other hospitals.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALLONE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding to me. I was in my office and listening to his very detailed explanation and very important explanation.

I think it is very crucial on the eve of this Thanksgiving, away from what we experienced this whole last week, and we were together this whole weekend, I recall being with the gentleman and debating this issue of adjournment on Saturday, of course a separate issue on the continuing resolution. But we decided together not to leave for our home States, which many of us had obligations, to stay here to demand that this Congress deal first of all with the question of the Government shutdown. And in the midst of that discussion, of course, and we have heard a lot of people talk about wins and losses, and knowing your commitment to this whole issue of Medicare and Medicaid, I have not heard the gentleman say that, but what we did get out of the continuing resolution, which I think is very important for the American public to know, is a listing of priorities that includes Medicare and Medicaid. That is a separate issue.

Because the Democrats stayed in, we were here yesterday, we were here when this Congress reconvened late last night to give us the opportunity to vote on the 1-day CR. And then, of course, today it was voted on. It is giving direction, or that listing of priorities will now give us direction for this budget bill, which of course this budget reconciliation came again to the House floor, and it was not responsive to what you have been highlighting.

If I might just add to what you have said——

Mr. PALLONE. Absolutely.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. We may not have heard the collective voices from the hospitals like we would have liked to. I know they were spending time trying to review all of the numbers, they were concerned that they would not speak precipitously. But now they have come and they have spoken. Five thousand hospitals and health systems nationwide have written, and I am not sure whether the Republicans have read this language, but I would just like to share with you, because your hospital association, the Texas Hospital Association, and the New York Hospital Association, it simply reads: "The undersigned national, state, and metropolitan organizations representing more than 5,000 hospitals and health systems nationwide, cannot support the conference report on H.R. 2491." It did not say we want to reconsider the budget reconciliation bill. "Our reason is straightforward as it stands. This legislation, viewed in its entirety" it did not say a piece here or a piece there, "Is not in the best interests of patients, communities, and the men and women who care for them."

This is from caregivers with no axe to grind, no political or partisan position. In fact, they waited this length of time, and obviously, they agree with your interpretation.

In my State in particular, with the Texas Medical Center nearby my district, but the Harris County Hospital

District largely in my district, we are finding that on the Medicaid issue we are losing some $5 billion in Medicaid. I think if people understand what that means, if we were to have a recession, in Houston we have the Johnson Space Center, and many people were hurt on this furlough and large numbers of individuals were furloughed. That is an employment base.

I am very glad to see that we have certainly made some commitments on funding on the space station, but just think, if something might happen which would create some sort of recession in Houston or in surrounding areas, the State, which the Republicans have so much bragged about as giving them block grants, would be cut off from helping those who newly need health care under Medicaid, because it would be in a block grant and they would already have lost some $5 billion out of the State of Texas.

It indicates in the gentleman's State, and he has already given the numbers, but it just lists all of the States that would do so.

If I could just show you one other plan here, or sort of a graph if I could, because you mentioned this as well, and that is that we seem to be in this trouble because of the Republican tax plan. Certainly I do not think there is one of us who has stood here, many people we know could benefit, if you will, and this is not an issue where you do not want to take credit for giving people money. But we have to, as we did with the continuing resolution—there is a question of priorities.

If you look, the lowest income individuals, and some of those are people working—some people work for between $6,000 and $10,000 a year—would be taxed, and in actuality, would be losing $168. Then, if you want to take the average American, we understand average Americans make about $41,000; somewhere between $30,000 or $41,000, if you are $30,000, say $27,000, you get $226 in a refund.

Of course, I do not give any negatives to any amount of money, but someone was on the House floor today saying you could invest this money for your youngsters' college education. I think I could interview a number of people making $27,000 and find out whether they could get any college education money out of investing $226. Then for someone making $41,000, they would get $514. Certainly a color TV is welcome into the household, but we misrepresent to the American people that they are getting a benefit by getting this tax back but yet losing direct student loans.

Then, as I conclude, to say to you that they would likewise, if they were making $606,000 they would be getting back $13,628. That is a question of priorities. I applaud the gentleman for his persistence. I think he has spoken to me on the House floor and has been asking for Medicare hearings more fully so we can understand the facts. I want to join him in that, because I think this is an important question. I did say I was going to conclude, but if you would just allow me on one point.

Mr. PALLONE. The gentlewoman can speak as long as she likes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. I notice we had the VA-HUD rule, and interestingly enough, we were prepared to debate that legislation, and it was mysteriously pulled. I would simply say, coming from Texas, I certainly applaud the work that we did in securing the space station. That is important to us. I would argue vigorously that that creates the work of the 21st century. I was proud to be able to support the funding for that, and not to eliminate or undermine some of the great works of those individuals.

Yet, what we are doing to housing, and then juxtaposing it against the space station, and that effort and science, which that really is not the right scapegoat, it is the $270 billion tax cut, we find in the housing area we are literally gutting an opportunity for what has been the new trend in America, creating affordable housing. My city is just on the precipice of going in and building housing for those who need housing, and here we are, gutting that.

We are gutting historic preservation provisions to protect historic buildings, we are gutting the environment, and interestingly enough, I hope that bill goes back so that we can be fair. We have been fair to those in the science with space station and NASA, and we need to be fair to those who would create the opportunities, young people who will be raised up in these houses, so they can be the next scientists and engineers.

I think this tells a story of that continuing resolution. I will go back to it, which is establishing priorities. No one wins or loses. It is bringing your experience, bringing my experience of my parents who did not have the same opportunities that I had, bringing them to this House of Representatives, to create the doors of opportunity for those seniors, for those young people, for those working people.

I applaud your remarks, and I hope that someone will listen to what we are saying. We are not against the balanced budget. We have all said it. But what we have emphasized is the importance of priorities. It appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

Mr. PALLONE. I appreciate the gentlewoman for speaking up as she did. I think you are absolutely right, that one of the, if not the, major benefit from this continuing resolution was the fact that it establishes the President's and the Democrats' priorities with regard to Medicaid, Medicare, education, and the environment.

What you were saying particularly about Medicaid and Medicare, I wanted to point out, I see that our leadership is here and I want to yield to them, but I would like to point out at some point how this budget conference actually makes the situation even worse with respect to some aspects of Medicaid and Medicare. It was not an improvement. It made it worse for our area hospitals.

☐ 1945

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, when I was having the dialog with the gentlewoman from Texas before, one of the things that I found out, again in response to the fact that some of my colleagues on the Republican side from New Jersey were sort of touting the changes that happened in the conference with regard to Medicare funding, what they were saying was that $55 million in additional money would be coming to New Jersey hospitals because of changes in Medicare.

What I found out was particularly disturbing to me because of the inequities of the formula that had been put into the conference bill. Essentially, what the formula said was that if a hospital in New Jersey, and of course this is throughout the country, so it applies in every State, if a hospital had more than 60 percent, 60 percent or more Medicare patients, it was going to get a small increase in its reimbursement rate for Medicare.

But then on further discovery, I found out that that was only true if the hospital was not a disproportionate share hospital or a teaching hospital. A disproportionate share hospital is a hospital that has a high number of Medicaid patients, in other words, low-income patients, or patients that receive Social Security disability benefits. Of course, the teaching hospital is a major institution that provides teaching to residents and to young doctors; and which also tends, in many cases, many of the teaching hospitals, happen to be in urban areas.

So what essentially this new formula said was, in my interpretation, if you have a high number of seniors at your hospital, we are going to give you extra money, but not if those seniors happen to be low-income seniors or if they happen to be people who are receiving Social Security disability, or other types of low-income individuals. That is an incredible inequity.

Here we have some of the major teaching hospitals, which serve the underprivileged, disproportionate share hospitals that serve large numbers of poor people, and have the greatest need for help from the Federal Government in terms of their reimbursement rate, and they are being cut at the same time as the hospitals who have a high number of Medicare patients, but do not have a lot of poor people, are being given an increase. That really says a lot about the way Speaker GINGRICH and the Republican leadership have gone about dealing with this bill.

It is not fair; there are a tremendous number of inequities in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to Medicaid and, again, talking about my home State of New Jersey, my colleagues were touting the fact that there was an increase from Medicaid funding to New Jersey of something like $200 million, largely because now the effort or the services that you provide to illegal immigrants were going to be included, whereas they had not been in the original bill.

But what they fail to point out is that New Jersey loses $6 billion in Medicaid funding over the next 7 years under this Republican budget. So here we have some slight increase, because you are serving illegal aliens, of $200 million, but a shortfall overall of $6 billion.

This prompted one of my local newspapers, the Home News and Tribune, to write an editorial which I would like to quote from briefly. They said, and they complimented Governor Whitman because she had tried to get some extra money for Medicaid in part of this conference. But then they said that the latest GOP plan still doesn't do enough to help needy New Jersey residents.

The new game plan would leave New Jersey with almost $6 billion less than the State would have received under existing law. The undeniable fact is that New Jersey still takes a big hit.

So whether you talk about Medicare or you talk about Medicaid, the bottom line is that, around the country, both programs suffer considerably, and in many ways will not be the type of quality health care programs that they are now.

Before I finish, I wanted to go into two other aspects of this Republican budget bill that I find very objectionable. The gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE] mentioned both of them. I just want to get into a little more detail about how this conference bill, the one that we voted on today and that I oppose, specifically affects certain education programs and certain environmental programs.

The most negative impact in terms of higher education is on what we call the direct student loan program. The Republican proposal basically caps direct student loans at 10 percent of total loan volume. What we know that this is going to do is to force up to 1,000 colleges and universities out of the direct student loan program and cut the number of direct student loans that actually go to students by 1.9 million. So 1.9 million students probably will not have access to these loans and 1,000 colleges and universities will be cut from the program because of this 10-percent cap.

Some people, though, have said to me, well, so what? We do not have a direct student loan program; we can go back to the old guaranteed student loan program that the banks used to operate and still operate under. Why do we need the direct student loan program? I would point out that the direct student loan program, of course, comes directly from the college or university, as opposed to the guaranteed loan program, which is financed; you go to a bank or a loan institution.

Well, there is a key difference, there is a key difference, and this is why so many students will not be able to get a loan and why so many colleges are complaining about this change and this downgrading of the direct student loan program.

One key advantage of direct loans over guaranteed loans is that the direct loans create more flexible repayment terms. Direct lending guarantees students the option of paying their loan back as a percentage of their income. When graduates are starting a family, working in their first job or starting a business, they can choose to make smaller payments. Guaranteed loan holders in the vast majority of cases do not provide this kind of flexibility.

Also, and this is the experience that I can talk to directly because Rutgers University in my district was one of the schools that first started with the direct student loan program and has had tremendous success with it, students have found that their loan money comes through faster under direct loans. There is just a lot less red tape.

Direct loans provide one-stop shopping for students. Borrowers make single loan payments to the Education Department for the life of the loans. The application process is simpler. Students do not have to submit a separate loan application to a bank and students do not wait in lines to endorse bank checks because schools receive the loans electronically from the Federal Government.

There are a tremendous number of reasons, and I do not want to keep talking about them all night, about why this direct loan program has been such a success. But I would like to look at it from the other point of view, which is why is it that the Republicans want to go back to the other guaranteed loan program administered by the banks? For what possible reason?

Well, I would maintain it is because of the special interest groups that are involved. They are the only winners, okay? Just to quote here from the New York Times, and then I would like to yield to the gentlewoman from Texas, the guaranteed student loan program as always been a favorite program for the Nation's banks. The New York Times pointed out in an editorial recently that, "Banks have long treasured the guaranteed student loan program which offers profits with much less risk than they have on the direct loan program ever since it was created in 1993 as unwanted competition.

Here we go. We are going back to this other program where we have to go through the banks, only that they can make a profit. There is no benefit. And from my own experience with Rutgers University and what the administrators there are telling me, the direct loan program is much better.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Again, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey, and he has plainly, I think, captured the essence of the problem, and he has captured it for his State. But in my State, the State of Texas, 41 schools will now lose the opportunity of the direct student loan program, but in particular, 57,000 students will not have that opportunity.

You have, I think, laid it out for both parents and faculty and administrators, and my husband happens to be an administrator at one of our institutions, the University of Houston in Texas. There is certainly a lot of merit.

I do not know if any of us can recall the anxiety of being a student, and now more and more students are working. They are commuters sometimes; they are constantly looking for resources in terms of helping them get their education, and there is something about the direct loan program that eases that burden. It is a clean program. The dollars are placed in the institution, you know what they are for, and it really makes sense.

If I might tie just another point to this whole question of education and students, I think it is important to note, because we look at this budget, or at least it has been raised as a budget that helps bring down the deficit and it helps bring us to the point of saving the country money.

First, I think we should note that under the Democrats, this country has the smallest number of Federal employees since 1933, before the New Deal. We are down some 200,000. And of course, my hat is off to the Federal employees who work for us and who were furloughed, because I think they were maligned unnecessarily. But they have streamlined themselves.

The other point is, this Budget Reconciliation Act is based upon numbers that now may not be accurate. That is why I am so glad of the continuing resolution that talked about OMB, it talked about consulting with other economists, it talked about other indicia that might be reflective of where we are. In fact, we are finding out that the CBO was too pessimistic, Congressional Budget Office.

We have been told to use all of those letters for people, but one group of fact-finders were too pessimistic. In fact, our growth is better than we had expected, and in fact, all of these spending cuts that they are recommending may not be necessary. The reason I say that is because we have recommendations to cut out the Commerce Department, the most successful Commerce Department, we have seen in history, that signed, I think, some 3 billion dollars' worth of contracts with China.

We have just heard that our export numbers with Japan, under the President's leadership and the Department of Commerce, have gone up some 44 percent, or maybe $40 billion is the number that comes to mind. But that has gone up.

However, in addition to cutting the Commerce Department, which creates jobs, I tied it because we have youngsters going to college and the anxiety of getting a college education, the need of loans and then getting a job, but we are also in this budget cutting research and development 35 percent. I do not think the corporations will remind me, detailing that they have reduced their research and development departments, they are basically in a profit mode, and that most new research comes out of the partnership between the private and public sector.

For example, in universities like Rutgers University, and here in Houston, Prairie View, Texas Southern University in my community, the University of Texas, and the University of Houston has a project. But that is the way we create work for the 21st century.

So I think that we have a budget reconciliation package, we wish we had had it October 1, meeting the deadlines, but now with a new lease on life, new numbers, a continuing resolution that opens the Government, that clearly sets priorities. New information about what cutting research and development will do for us. I think we can do a better job.

VACATING AND AMENDING PROCEEDINGS ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 281, ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, before I yield to the gentleman, I am asked to do a procedural matter, I ask unanimous consent to amend the earlier Democratic caucus resolution, House Resolution 281, and place the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PETE GEREN, directly behind the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. COSTELLO, on the Committee on Transportation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the adoption of House Resolution 281 is vacated, and without objection, the resolution is readopted in the form as requested by the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for yielding to me.

□ 2000

I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for bringing these very vital points. It just caused me to think of an array of opportunity that we now have to really look at the budget that now can reflect on some new economic numbers, on the gross domestic product. It can reflect upon where we want to go in the 21st century.

Do we really want to cut research and development? Do we want to eliminate housing for people who are now getting on their feet, first-time owners, single parents with children who are getting to be homeowner? Do we want to take away a department, for example, I use that just as an example, even though we have brought down the number of Federal employees, that actually has created billions of dollars of new contracts with our world partners, that has created and would create jobs for our young people?

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PALLONE. I want to thank the gentlewoman again for emphasizing those priorities that are now in that continuing resolution.

The last one that I wanted to mention, and the one she has already mentioned, is in regard to the environment. Again, the President reiterated that one of the problems that he has with this Republican budget that was adopted today is that it cuts funding or assumes cuts in funding for environmental programs too much.

Perhaps the best example of that, again, which was alluded to by the gentlewoman, was this appropriations bill. We call it the VA, HUD and other independent agencies appropriations bill, which was supposed to come up today but was pulled from the floor, apparently because the Republican leadership does not have the votes. I want to say thank you for the fact that they do not have the votes because this is a very bad bill, particularly with regard to the Environmental Protection Agency.

What it does with regard to the EPA is essentially decrease EPA funding by about 20 percent. In that funding cut, amongst the money that has been cut, the hardest hit is enforcement, which is cut almost 25 percent.

I have said over and over again on the floor of this House, and will continue to say, what is the point of having good environmental laws if you do not have the money to hire people to go out and enforce those laws? It is like basically saying to the polluters, "It's OK, you can do whatever you want, because we're not going to come after you, we're never going to indict you or punish you for violating the law." That is essentially what this bill says.

It also makes particularly deep cuts in aid to the States for water pollution control. I find that particularly offensive because my district is largely along the Atlantic Ocean and also along the Raritan Bay and Raritan River, and we have benefited tremendously the last few years from Federal funding for upgrading our sewage treatment plants and for other provisions that make it easier for us to enforce our water quality standards.

As a result, in Jersey and particularly in my district the ocean water quality has improved, the bay has improved and the river has improved. That has meant a lot to us economically because we depend on tourism for a good part of our income.

Back in the late 1980's when I was first elected to the House of Representatives, we had our beaches closed for most of the summer because of the poor water quality. That has not happened again because the water quality has improved, and largely because of Federal dollars that went back to the States for water pollution control and also because of improvements in enforcement.

The last thing that this appropriation bill does that I want to mention, it does a lot of horrible things to the environment, but another one that is particularly important to my district and something that I care a lot about is the Superfund Program. It is a number of years ago now that the Federal Government established a Superfund Program, which is essentially what it is, a Superfund, a large pot of money that is used to clean up the worst hazardous waste sites around the country in all 50 States.

This appropriations bill that gladly was pulled from the floor today, but I am sure is going to come back, it makes a 19-percent cut in funding for the Superfund Program. What that essentially means is that the only sites that will be cleaned up are the ones that are already on the Superfund list. In fact, it actually says that the EPA cannot add a new hazardous waste site to the national priorities list for cleanup unless the State's Governor requests it.

So basically what they are trying to do here, what the Republican leadership is trying to do, either through this appropriation bill or ultimately when they reauthorize the Superfund Program, is to basically say, "This is a closed shop. We're not going to establish any more Superfund sites," in an effort to try and save money.

That is not the way to go about handling a program which has been very important to many States, particularly in my home State of New Jersey, and it is also not a very rational or scientific way to proceed to simply say, "Well, if you didn't get on the list now, we're not going to put you on the list anymore because we don't have any more money to pay for cleanup."

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to conclude by saying I know that this budget bill passed today. It is a bad bill. The President is going to veto it. As the gentlewoman from Texas said, we hope that in the continuing resolution we establish the priorities, which are to preserve Medicare, to provide adequate funding for Medicaid, to provide enough funding so that we can have a good Student Loan Program and that we can protect the environment.

I am hopeful that after the President vetoes this bill, serious negotiation will take place to emphasize those priorities and not use this budget as a way to simply provide more money for wealthy Americans through tax breaks.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARR). Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, it is certainly great to be here today talking about what has been going on in this House in a truly historic time. This is the first time in a generation that the executive branch and the legislative branch have come together and decided that we were going to do what Americans have had to do for over 200 years, and, that is, balance our checkbook, to only spend as much money as we take in, and to stop stealing from our children and our grandchildren and future generations.

I think a lot of people have heard the numbers before. They have heard that this is a country that is now $5 trillion in debt. We are a Government that spends $4 for every $3 that we take in, we are a Government that continues to steal from future generations and our children and grandchildren.

I have got a 7-year-old boy and a 4-year-old boy. Right now the debt that they are holding on their head is $20,000. In fact, every man, woman, and child right now is $20,000 in debt if we divide that $5 trillion by the number of people that are in this country.

If you want to drive it home and figure out how much my 7-year-old boy Joey and my 4-year-old boy Andrew will be owing in taxes over the course of their lifetime if we continue down the same failed path that we continued down when the Democrats were in control for 40 years and if we followed the President's plan, my children and your children, your grandchildren would owe $187,000 simply in interest on the Federal debt. That is money that they would be paying over the course of their lifetime, as their taxes continue to escalate.

We cannot say it enough, that today and this past week and over this past year we have drawn a line in the sand. We have ignored the polls. We have ignored the pundits. We have ignored everybody that said, "You can't do it. You can't balance the budget. Washington will not let you, the bureaucrats will not let you, the President will not let you."

In fact, it was 1 year ago that the President, the man who is on the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue and who has been telling the American people for the last 2 weeks that he has always been for a balanced budget, it was that same President who 1 year ago introduced his budget, 1994 style, to the American people.

He introduced that budget that continued to allow deficits to skyrocket continually into the future. Ninety-nine Senators voted on that budget 1 year ago and all 99 Senators voted "no" on the President's plan.

I guess they are pretty smart over there in the other body. They followed the President once. The Democrats followed the President in this Chamber and in the Chamber over there when in 1993 the President introduced his blueprint of what he wanted America to look like.

Do you remember what that blueprint said? It said that President Clinton wanted to raise taxes, he wanted to raise spending, and he wanted to continue to let the deficit soar.

The fact of the matter is his 1993 plan raised taxes more than any other President in the history of this country. He claimed it was the largest deficit reduction plan of all time. The fact of the matter is that if you look at it through the life of it, deficits soared at the end, because he put off all the cuts until the very end.

Now he says, "Well, we've brought the deficit down some in the past few years."

Well, sure, if we wanted to tax Americans and continue to tax Americans and continue to tax Americans and continue to tax Americans, we could bring the deficit down, too. Of course we would continue down the same failed path that we have continued down before and would continue to punish people for being productive, would continue to take their savings away from them, would continue to tax seniors.

This is a thing that has amazed me the most about the debate, that the President and Members from the liberal side could look with a straight face at the American people and say, "We want to protect senior citizens." Because the fact of the matter is that when they had their budget in 1993, when they had their chance to make a difference, what did they do? The first thing they did was they raised taxes on senior citizens. How much? Well, they made senior citizens pay taxes on 85 percent of their Social Security benefits. But that was not enough. Nosiree, Bob. They decided that if you are a senior citizen and you actually want to be productive with your life after you start drawing Social Security benefits, well, productivity is something that liberals cannot put up with, so we are going to have to tax you.

They lowered the earnings limit from $34,000 to $11,000, basically told senior citizens if you work, we are going to punish you.

So let us fast forward. That is 1993. If they wanted to raise taxes on seniors, I guess that was their business. They paid for it. Not a single Republican in 1993 voted for the largest tax increase in the history of the world, Bill Clinton's tax increase, and the Democrats' tax increase, not one Republican voted for it and we saw what happened last year. The Republicans said,

> Elect us and we're going to lower your taxes and we're going to balance the budget, we're going to save future generations from the debt that is now crushing us.

We did that. We got rewarded for it. There was an unprecedented landslide. I refuse to believe, despite what the President says, despite what the Democrats say, I refuse to believe that Americans now are against a balanced budget, or that Americans now believe, 1 year later, that they are not being taxed enough, or that 1 year later Americans believe that they are not being regulated enough.

But if you get past the rhetoric and you look at what the President has done and what liberal Democrats in this Chamber have done, they have continued to espouse higher taxes, more regulations, and a balanced budget is nowhere in sight. I know it has got to be confusing to some who do not live in Washington and are lucky enough to live outside the Beltway, but the fact of the matter is that the President has changed his mind so much on the balanced budget that it is hard to keep track.

Back in 1992, he promised he would balance the budget in 5 years. By my count, he has another year or two. Well, that changed very, very quickly. We all remember the horror that Americans watched as they watched the President tell us that, yes, he had promised a balanced budget plan, and, yes, he had promised a middle-class tax cut. In fact, we remember him in New Hampshire holding up the plan when people ridiculed him. He said, "You laugh at me but I've got the plan right here."

But then we watched when Governor Clinton got elected and became President Clinton. What was the first thing he did? He got on the airwaves and said,

> Well, I know what I said in the campaign, I know, I know, but, listen, we've been looking at the numbers and we're not going to be able to give you the middle-class tax cut.

It gets worse. "We're going to have to raise your taxes." It gets worse. "We're going to have to pass the largest tax increase in the history of this country."

Well, obviously Americans were upset. He paid for it in the polls, he paid for it by reneging on his promise to balance the budget in 5 years and in the off-year election, the Republicans and conservatives were swept into power across this country.

How did the President respond?

☐ 2015

He was in the denial stage, and he denied that Americans really wanted a balanced budget, that it was not a priority.

He introduced a budget plan that did not balance the budget. Then he moved forward and later on he came in an he said, "Well, maybe we can balance the budget. Maybe we can balance it in 10 years." In fact, he went up to New Hampshire, which was coincidentally the site of the first primary, and somebody told him that he needed to support a balanced budget. So he said, "I support a balanced budget."

Then he came back to Washington. His advisers got a hold of him. We said, "No; no, no; maybe I do not support a balanced budget." Then he went back up to New Hampshire. They said, "Mr. President, do you support a balanced?" He said, "Yes, we can balance the budget." Then he came back down to DC, changed his mind. "No, we can't."

Finally he put out a plan that he says will balance the budget in 10 years. Unfortunately, it was about $200 billion short. We run deficits of $200 billion well into the future. The plan did not balance the budget.

House Democrats were enraged, enraged that the President of the United States would actually dare to put forward a plan to balance the budget. The ranking member of Appropriations got on the floor, and like many others, was very up upset. What did he say? He said, "We are upset about the fact that the President proposed to balance the budget." But what we found is if you do not like the President's position on any issue, just be patient, wait a couple weeks, it is sure to change, and sure enough, 2 weeks later it changed again, and he went from 10 years, saying we can do it in 7 years. Then he went to 9 years and 8 years and it was sort of hard to nail down the President exactly on what number he thought.

Finally, the House Republicans said we demand a balanced budget in 7 years using true numbers, that too much is at stake, and we did that.

Now they are starting to try to weasel out of it again and are now saying, "Well, I know we have said that we will commit to 7 years, but it is 7, maybe 8 years."

Well, we are sending a message to the Democrats, to the President on the other side of Pennsylvania Avenue and to all Americans, the freshman class of the 104th Congress will not compromise. We will balance the budget in 7 years using true figures or we will not go along with any plan. It is that simple. It is that simple.

Why do we need to do it? We need to do it to ensure future generations have unprecedented economic growth. We need to do it to stop driving up the deficits, and we need to do it to save, protect, and preserve Medicare.

I have got to tell you I am new to Washington. I have never been elected to office before this year. I have got to tell you one of the most shocking things to me has been the demagoguery that has flown around on this issue of Medicare. The President came out himself in April of this year saying that Medicare was going bankrupt. The trustees reported that. Three members of his own Cabinet are on the Medicare trustees. They said Medicare is going bankrupt. If you do not do something about it, you are going to pay because the system is going to go bankrupt in the year 2002.

Well, we sent a CR to the President that reflected our plan to save, protect, and preserve Medicare, and the President got on the TV and said he could not sign that CR, that he was going to veto it and, he was going to send all the Federal employees out, that he could not have Medicare destroyed like this, it was unbelievable, these mean-spirited Republicans, and the press bought into it. And judging by some of the polls, a lot of Americans bought into it.

But here is the catch: Our plan was almost identical to the very same plan that President Clinton had been supporting for some time. I mean, can you believe that; look at the news footage of him this past week and last week. You would think that this man had a plan that was radically different from the Republican plan and that the Republicans were mean-spirited and that only Bill Clinton could protect and preserve Medicare and he had to save the senior citizens from the mean-spirited Republicans.

But the unpleasant fact, in fact, they are difficult things to get around, but the facts show our Medicare plan is almost identical to the President's Medicare plan.

Let me tell you something, there is a Washington Post editorial that was written last week on this issue, and the editorial reads at the top, "The real default." Now, the Washington Post has never been an ally of the conservative movement or the Republican Party. But let me tell you something, this, I believe, is probably the most important editorial that has been written by any publication in the past 5 years, because it was after this editorial was written that the White House was finally shamed into backing off from their unabashed demagoguery.

Let me read a little bit to you:

> Bill Clinton and the congressional Democrats were handed an unusual chance this year to deal constructively with the effect of Medicare on the deficit, and they blew it. The chance came in the form of the congressional Republican plan to balance the budget over seven years. Some other aspects of that plan deserved to be resisted, but the Republican proposal to get at the deficit partly by confronting the cost of Medicare deserved support. The Democrats, led by the president, chose instead to present themselves as Medicare's great protectors. They have shamelessly used the issue, demagogued on it, because they think that's where the votes are and the way to derail the Republican proposals generally. The president was still doing it this week; a Republican proposal to increase Medicare premiums was one of the reasons he alleged for the veto that has shut down the government—and never mind that he himself, in his own budget, would countenance a similar increase.

This is still the Washington Post talking:

> We've said some of this before; it gets more serious. If the Democrats play the Medicare card and win, they will have set back for years, for the worst of political reasons, the very cause of rational government in behalf of which they profess to be behaving. Politically, they will have helped to lock in place the enormous financial pressure that they themselves are first to deplore on so many other federal programs, not least the programs for the poor.

You see, getting Medicare increases under control is not about protecting the rich. The Post has come out before saying the Medicare cuts have no correlation to the tax cuts, that we are saving Medicare, and in saving Medicare we are saving the system. We are making it solvent. It is about helping all Americans, helping get this debt out of the way and the deficit out of the way.

But some people still want to default on leadership, and in the Washington Post article yesterday, written by Matthew Miller, the Post wrote:

> Though many of the President's advisers think that the G.O.P.'s premium proposal is sensible and differs very little from his own plan, the President fired sound bites from the oval office daily, taking the low road in ways that only Washington pundits could recast as standing tall.

As the polls show, it worked. The fact of the matter is it worked in the short run.

Many, when asked in this body, many had been asked when is this shutdown going to end, and many were cynical and said, well, it ends when the President's poll numbers start going down. It is not a coincidence that it was late Friday night that the President's approval ratings in this crisis had gone down six points, the next morning Leon Panetta marched on Capitol Hill and actually sat down and started negotiating seriously.

I have got to tell you I have been deeply dismayed by this whole process, deeply dismayed not only by the administration's comments but by what Leon Panetta said. He, of course, said Republicans were terrorists. He said we were holding a gun to the President's head, because we simply insisted that he balance the budget in 7 years.

The fact of the matter is Leon Panetta, time after time after time after time, attached things to the continuing resolutions in the 1980's when he was dealing with a Republican administration. He was not called on it. But that is fine. Then we hear him talking CBO numbers and saying that we should have OMB numbers.

Well, it was President Clinton himself who, in 1993, stood right here in this Chamber and told the American people the CBO estimates were the most accurate estimates and we must adhere to CBO estimates so the American people do not think we are playing games.

Well, we listened to the President. We want to adhere to CBO estimates because they are the most conservative, but as conservative as those CBO estimates are, one important fact remains. When the President, in 1993, stood in this Chamber and said we needed to go by CBO estimates because they were the most conservative estimates, those estimates in 1993 had been overly optimistic for 13 years in a row, which meant the deficit continued to shoot up for 13 years in a row.

We have got to be conservative with our children's and our grandchildren's money. We have got to stop stealing from future generations. We have got to balance the checkbook and stop worrying about short-term political gains. My children's future depend on it. All of America's children's future depends on it. We have to draw a line in the sand. That is what we have done, and that is why the President finally sat down and adhered to absolutely every demand that we asked and do it here, too.

I would like to turn now and have a good friend of mine, the gentleman from the State of Minnesota [Mr. GUTKNECHT] discuss the issue.

Were you not surprised at the turn we saw of the President this past week, how he was at 10 years, we were at 7 years, he wanted OMB numbers, we wanted CBO numbers; he came and compromised. Sure, he compromised with the freshman class. He wanted to balance the budget in 5 years. Now he has come in an said he will balance the budget in 7 years using CBO numbers, despite what the administration has been saying today. That is what they are committing to. Is that your understanding?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to talk a little bit about this, as both being Members of this freshman class, we have been called extremists, heretics, all kinds of names like that. I do think the American people sent a very clear message a year ago. I think they expect us to fulfill the promises we made.

As you know, if I could, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH], I would like to read a letter that the gentleman helped me draft, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH], and signed by virtually every Member of our freshman class, that we sent down to the White House last week. I think it sort of frames the issue from our perspective and how much impact this ultimately had on the President's decision over the weekend to get serious about negotiating. We do not know. But, hopefully, it had some impact.

If I could, I would like to read at least some excerpts from it.

> DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Some are holding us Freshmen Members of the Republican House Caucus responsible for the actions of the last several days. Permit us to share our perspective on this important issue.
>
> It is unfortunate that 800,000 non-essential federal employees were furloughed. But we believe very strongly that it would be a tragedy of historic proportions if we were to back down now on our commitment to balance the federal budget in seven years. Twelve months ago, the voters of this nation sent a powerful message that we needed to change the way Washington does business. They wanted to put the federal government on a diet, and they wanted us to balance their budget.

There is a misguided belief that the current debate surrounding the balanced budget issue is about politics. Balancing the federal budget, Mr. President, is about principle. This is not about the re-election of the Freshmen Class, it's about preserving the future of our country. In fact, we believe it goes deeper than that. What is at stake here is preserving the basic concept of self-government. If we cannot balance our budget when we are the sole surviving super-power, when we're at peace in the world, when we have a relatively strong economy with low unemployment, then when will we?

We want to resolve this. The American people want us to work together. We have been granted an historic opportunity. Our children would not hold us harmless if we squandered it. This is a moment of truth. This is when "We The People" show whether we have the courage and moral character to stop stealing from our children and grandchildren. Future generations are counting on us to show some leadership and courage. Let us agree on the destination. We can then have a healthy debate about the road map.

It was signed by virtually every member of our freshman class.

We sent that down to the White House Friday because we wanted to send a message that this is not about politics, it is about principle, and it is about the future of this country and whether or not we have the moral courage and character to do what we all know is right. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH] said it. Most of us thought we ought to balance the budget in 5 years or less, and we believed it could be done if we were willing to make some really rough choices. In fact, some might argue that our budget we are proposing today is actually too generous.

But I would also like to read this, because there has been some distortion already today, and, in fact, it started as early as last night, and I was somewhat disappointed in the news conferences at some of the comments made by Mr. Panetta and the President and others about what they duly agreed to. At some point the American people, and, if you would like an extra copy, they can call my office in Washington, drop me a note in care of the Cannon Office Building, I will send them out a copy of exactly what the President and the leaders of the congressional delegation agreed. Too, if I could, I would just like to read this. It is just a paragraph and a half long.

It says:

The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the first session of the 104th Congress to achieve a balanced budget not later than fiscal year 2002, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office and the President, and the President and the Congress agree that the balanced budget must protect future generations, ensure Medicare solvency, reform welfare, and provide adequate funding for Medicaid, education, agriculture, national defense, veterans, and the environment. Further, the balanced budget shall adopt tax policies to stimulate future economic growth and to help working families.

Now, that is essentially, in fact, that is word for word, what was agreed to between the House, the Senate, and the President. It says no later than 2002. That means in not more than 7 years.

But no sooner had the ink dried on the paper that it was agreed to on, than already the White House was saying "Well, we did not quite really mean 7 years." I think that is what is frustrating to the Members of the Congress, I think it is what is frustrating to members of the public.

I think the interesting point, there is a story told about Yogi Berra. He has become one of my favorite philosophers. One night Yogi went out by himself to have pizza. He ordered a small pizza. The waitress said, "Do you want that cut into 8 slices or 6?" Yogi said, "Well, I'm not that hungry tonight; just cut it in 6. I do not think I can eat 8 pieces."

That is sort of what the argument is we have been having about the budget lately, because we have not agreed to how big the pizza is going to be. Now we can have the debate, about how much is going to go to the environment, how much is going to go to national defense, how much is going to go to transportation, how much we will spend on welfare, how much we will spend on Medicaid and other entitlements. At least we finally have agreed on the size of the pizza. How many slices and exactly the way it is sliced, I guess, is not as important to us as the fact we have agreed. We have agreed on a destination. Now let us have a healthy argument about the road map.

Let me say this. Two points need to be made. First of all, as far as we are concerned, this is like the Contract With America that we signed last year. The agreement that was reached last night is a contract with the American people, and we take it very seriously, and we hope the White House will take it very seriously.

Second, and this is even more important, it is now incumbent upon the President and this administration to come forward with a budget plan that they like. Now, they spent the last 6 or 8 weeks telling everybody about the things in our plan they do not like. That is fair enough. That is part of the democratic process. They have every right to criticize some of the things they do not like in our budget plan.

But now it is their responsibility to put their plan on the table. I think we in the Congress and the American people have every right and expect and should demand that they put a plan on the table.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. If the gentleman will yield for 1 minute, I think this is an important point and important distinction. I have heard many say the Democrats do not have the responsibility. The Republicans were elected, they are in charge of the House. The Democrats do not have responsibility to put a plan on the table to save Medicare, which they have not done in the House, or to put forward a budget plan that balances the budget, which the majority of the Members have not done.

But it is important to remember that in 1993, when the Republican Party was in its 39th year in the wilderness, that the gentleman from Ohio, JOHN KASICH, the same JOHN KASICH who has forever changed Washington, DC, through his leadership on the Committee on the Budget, putting together the first balanced budget in this generation, JOHN KASICH came up with a plan. He had a plan, and the Republicans all supported that plan.

That is extremely important. This year, the Democratic leadership has failed to put forward a plan. All they are doing is complaining, saying what we are doing wrong. But if you look at the minority leader and the whip and everybody in the minority, they voted against every single balanced budget plan. I have to tell you, they have had about six chances this year to vote for a balanced budget.

They voted against a balanced budget, whether it is a Republican balanced budget; they voted against a balanced budget, whether it was a coalition balanced budget plan the conservative Democrats put together. They voted against every budget.

So when I hear them get on the floor or get into press conferences and say "Yes, we support a balanced budget, but this one is mean-spirited," I am sorry, those words just do not ring true to me.

Introduce your balanced budget plan, and then you have a right to get involved with this debate. But if you do not introduce your own plan, if you do not have the nerve, if you do not have the guts, if you do not have the political will to show Americans what your vision of America is and how you want to balance the budget and save the next generation, then just be quiet and sit on the bench. I will yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, that is what has really troubled so many Americans for so long. They have seen a lack of courage and will power in the Congress to actually follow through. It is what I call the "yes, buts". In fact, Representative CHRIS SHAYS the other day said it so clearly, I think, on the House floor here. He said you know, everybody gets up and says we want a balanced budget. Everybody wants a balanced budget. But he said if that were true, we would have a balanced budget. Everybody says yes, I want a balanced budget, but. Yes, but. That is what gets the American people so frustrated.

I have to congratulate Chairman ARCHER of the Committee on Ways and Means as well. He went down the other day and said our plan is not perfect. I do not think anybody on this side of the aisle would argue it is perfect. But there is one thing about our plan that nobody else can say about their plan, because they do not have a plan, but at least we have a plan, and it will work according to CBO scoring.

CBO, as the gentleman says, has been the most conservative over the years. Frankly, I think perhaps too conservative, but I would rather err on the side of conservative when you are talking about balancing the budget and trying to save the future generations of Americans from a debt which is actually going to come crashing down around them.

The gentleman talked earlier about polls. Sometimes we here in Washington get too much influenced by polls. The gentleman talked about one of my favorite newspapers, the Washington Post, which he indicated is not exactly a Republican propaganda organ. Many times in fact so many of those on this side of the aisle take what they say with a grain of salt.

I would like to remind you of a poll done a couple of weeks ago by the Washington Post. Here is what they asked. It was October 30, 1995; that was a little over 2 weeks ago. They asked, "Whom do you trust to do a better job with the main problems facing this Nation over the next few years?" And they said, Republicans, 47 percent; Democrats, 39 percent.

Now, when we took over this House, if I remember correctly, on that same test ballot question the day before the election, the score was Republicans, 44; Democrats, 41. We only had a 3 percent advantage a year ago, and we picked up 73 seats.

Even more telling, it seems to me, they went on to ask a somewhat different question, but along the same lines; they asked, "Which party better represents your views on national issues?" And this is according to the Washington Post poll taken about 2½ weeks ago. Republicans, 55 percent; Democrats, 25 percent.

I do not know how your phone messages were over the last week during the furlough of Federal employees, but mine were overwhelming. One day we received something like 270 calls saying hang in there, continue back up, do not blink. We had 27 calls which said cave in to the President. I think that is pretty reflective of where the American people were, and I think the American people were well served by our negotiators, because JOHN KASICH and our Speaker and other leaders did not blink.

As a result, we are going to have a balanced budget agreement. We now have a contract with this President, and a contract with the American people, that we are going to do what we said we are going to do. We are actually going to balance this budget.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. I appreciate that. I have got to tell the gentleman something. One of the reasons I believe why twice as many people are now saying the Republican Party reflects their views more than the Democratic Party is because the Democratic leadership, at least in this House, has had a total void. They have not told us what they believe in.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. If the gentleman will yield on that point, this is a critical point. They did offer a Medicare alternative. I think it only got about 100 votes. Not even their leader, Mr. GEPHARDT, voted for their plan. On their alternate budget, not even their leader, Mr. GEPHARDT, voted for their plan.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. He did not vote for either plan. I do not believe the whip from Michigan voted for the plan. Yet they will stand there self-righteously and say they support the balanced budget and want to save Medicare. Yet they voted against every plan that will do that.

Let me show you this chart, because this is an important chart. It shows that so many Americans have not realized because of what the President has been saying for the past few weeks. The Washington Post, and again I am quoting from them, this is not a Republican, this is what the Post says, it says:

> The Democrats and the President have shamelessly demagogued the Medicare issue despite the fact that our plans are so similar.

This is the Medicare part B premiums over the next 7 years, and as we can see, as you go out 7 years to the year 2002, the Republican and the Democrat premium are the same. Look at this. You have got $83 and $87. There is only a $4 difference. That is why the Washington Post said that the President shamelessly demagogued on the Medicare issue.

But it is not just Medicare that they are trying to scare Americans on. In my district, we have about as many veterans as any other district in the country. Our area has a long, proud military history, with a lot of veterans. Let me tell you, they are so important to this country.

But if you remember, Secretary Brown has actually started sending out political messages on the pay stubs, saying that the Republican plan for future veterans benefits was going to savage VA benefits and that it was more mean-spirited than the President's plan.

The fact of the matter is, when he came to Capitol Hill under sworn testimony, he had radically different testimony.

This is what he was asked. This is Secretary Brown from the Department of Veterans Affairs. When asked about Mr. SIMPSON's assertion that veterans would suffer more under the Clinton administration's proposed budget than other congressional plans, Mr. Brown said, "He's absolutely right." That is November 8, 1995.

Now, let me tell you, I understand in the Department of HHS and in other areas, I understand that sometimes we are going to have political differences. But we are talking about veterans. We are talking about going out there and scaring the men and women who fought to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

This is just an extension of the mediscarce attack that the Democrats had. We have seen it in Medicare, we have seen it in Veterans Affairs, where they say whatever they want to say, just to scarce people and pick up votes, according to the Washington Post.

Now we are hearing if, and, again, here is a Washington Post quote from November 15, 1995:

> The Democrats have been prospecting harder for votes among the elderly and against the Republican proposal than they have for the savings needed to bring down the deficit.

They have done it in education. I heard the last speaker get up here talking about all the mean-spirited cuts that we were going to have in student loans. I do not support cuts in students loans. Just because I do not want to turn over all the power to the Federal bureaucracy, which is what they are proposing, does not mean I am against student loans.

The fact of the matter is, under our plan this year, we spend $24.5 billion on student loans. Over our 7-year plan, that doubles or actually goes up 50 percent to $36.4 billion. I did not go to Oxford, I am not a Rhodes Scholar, I am just a dumb country lawyer, as they love saying in my part of the country, but the fact of the matter is even where I went to school, if you go from $24 billion to $36 billion, that is an increase.

Also, when I have somebody standing up here with a straight face telling me that direct student lending, where you have a consolidation of power in Washington, DC, is going to be more efficient than allowing the private sector to handle it and to stay involved in it, goes against history. It goes against 40 years of history.

So, if we are increasing student loans by 50 percent, which we are, those are the straight numbers under the budget proposal, then how can that be a cut? The earned income tax credit goes from $19 billion in 1995 to $25 billion through the end of our program. School lunch program goes from $6.3 billion to $7.8 billion; student loans again, from $24 billion to $36 billion; Medicaid spending from $89 billion to $127 billion; and Medicare spending from $178 billion to $289 billion.

□ 2045

So let us talk about new math, real math, and not Washington math, where a spending increase is called a spending cut.

I yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, a long time ago, one of our founding fathers who served in this body, John Adams, said facts are stubborn things. It is one of my favorite expressions, and I really do believe, as we debate this budget, facts are our friends. I think if we can get the facts to the American people, and again anyone who would like a copy of what Representative SCARBOROUGH has just talked about, where earned income tax credit goes from $19.8 billion this year to $25.4 billion in the year 2002; school lunches, where we are making these draconian cuts, actually increases from $6.3 billion to $7.8 billion; student loans, again we have been criticized for these big cuts in student loans, we are spending $24.5 billion this year and we will go to $36.5 billion in only 7 years; Medicaid, again where people are going to be thrown out of hospitals, Medicaid spending this year $89.2 billion will go to $127.3 billion in only 7 years; and, finally, Medicare, where they are using the greatest mediscare tactics, goes from $178 billion to almost $290 billion.

If people will get the facts, I think facts are our friends, and even when we talk about these tax cuts for the rich. I must tell the gentleman, and I do not know if I should share this story. Obviously, I will not use his name, but I had a gentleman talk to me the other day, and by all accounts he is rich. He told me last year he earned $325,000. He will earn about the same amount next year. So he went to his accountant and had the blueprint of the Republican tax plan and he had his accountant go through his taxes and asked him how much of a tax cut will I get next year? Does the gentleman know what the answer was? Zero. Zip. Nada. Nothing.

He will get no tax cut. His kids are grown. He has no capital gains. This is all dividend income and other income that he has, so he gets no tax cut. So this idea that all rich people will get huge tax cuts is just bogus. Most of the tax benefit will go to those families earning less than $75,000 a year. And the trouble is, many of our friends and colleagues here in Congress know that to be a fact and yet they will not acknowledge it.

I yield back and perhaps we can pursue a conclusion after we yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. I appreciate that. We certainly will, and it is my honor to yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island, who also has a seat with me on the Committee on National Security, and we can work together as a body, Republicans and Democrats alike. He is going to be speaking on something different from what we have been talking about, but something very important and timely today.

I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

RESOLUTION CONDEMNING ATROCITIES COMMITTED IN FORMER YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, Congressman SCARBOROUGH from Florida, for yielding me this time.

Fifty years ago today the Nuremberg trials began. On November 20, 1945, the leaders of Nazi Germany were placed on trial for committing crimes against humanity. The horror of the Holocaust was exposed and the world hoped that it would never ever see such systematic evil perpetrated again.

No one can begin to even compare any evil to that kind of systematic evil perpetrated during the Holocaust, but evil is evil. Tragically, history has proven this optimism wrong. As we all know, the Balkans have been the site of the most recent war crimes in Europe since the end of World War II. As Nuremberg proved, there can be no place for those who commit or order or condone such acts. There can be no tolerance for those who offer refuge for those responsible for such acts.

Recognizing the danger of silence in the face of such tragedy, the United Nations established an international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. Today I am introducing a resolution condemning the atrocities committed in the former Yugoslavia and expressing the support of this Congress for this war crimes tribunal.

The resolution affirms the following principles:

First, those indicated by the tribunal cannot occupy any position of authority in any government or any entity in the republics of the former Yugoslavia;

Second, that the United States should insist upon the full cooperation of the republics of the former Yugoslavia in bringing those who have been indicted by this war crimes tribunal to justice;

Third, future support for the reintegration of the republics of the former Yugoslavia into the international community should be dependent on their full cooperation and support for this international war crimes tribunal;

Fourth, investigators for their tribunal should be given full access to all the sites, to all the witnesses, and to all the evidence of alleged and suspected war crimes; and

Fifth, the United States should oppose amnesty for any indicated war criminals.

On this, the anniversary, the world hopes for peace in the Balkans, but it is the responsibility of the Congress to say unequivocally that there will be no peace without justice. This century has been marked by many tragedies. If the next century is to be free of such horrors, the responsibility falls on us to lay the foundation today. We cannot erase what has happened, but we can and we must do all that we can to prevent such a recurrence from ever occurring again.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring this resolution, and I thank, once again, my colleague from the State of Florida, JOE SCARBOROUGH, for allowing me this time.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman from Rhode Island, and I also thank him for his leadership on the National Security Committee, and certainly I have been with him when he has asked some very tough questions to our policy leaders and questioned those who would simply say that we would put Americans in harms's way simply to protect our standing in NATO.

I think we have to have a more hard-nosed approach than simply worry about how we are going to look at NATO, and have to ask what America's role is and what America's vital interest is in that conflict.

Certainly there have been horrors. I saw a picture of a 7-year-old who was blown off his bike by a Serbian mortar shell, and the ABC cameras followed him and he was crying to his parents, "Please don't cut off my leg; please don't cut off my leg." And the news reporter said they did not cut off his leg. But, unfortunately, the young boy died a few hours later.

The horrors are absolutely indefensible, and I would gladly sign on to your resolution, and I thank you for bringing that up. Congress has made some controversial decisions on the Bosnian conflict over the past week or two, but that is certainly something I would hope all Republicans and Democrats alike could come together.

I yield back to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Well, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about balancing the budget, and I think sometimes we have been characterized in the national media as mean spirited and that we are draconian and that this is simply an accounting exercise. But I think sometimes we need to step back and understand that there are going to be enormous benefits to the average American family if we are able to finally, at last, balance the Federal books.

A study was done by DRI McGraw Hill that essentially says that if, and this is pursuant to what Alan Greenspan had said, that if we actually could balance the Federal budget for the first time in over 30 years, it was his opinion that real interest rates would drop by at least 2 percent and that economic growth would be at least 1½ points stronger.

I think people need to understand what that means to the average family in terms of if real interest rates really do continue to come down, as they are now coming down. As a matter of fact, I think just with what we have been doing, and the belief now in the financial markets that we are finally serious, Congress is serious about putting the Federal Government on a diet and limiting the growth of entitlements, we are already seeing the benefits of that.

What this will mean to an average family is, the average cost of a mortgage would drop by $121 a month. The average student loan repayment would drop by $4 a month. A car loan would be $9 a month cheaper. The child tax credit, the economic growth advantages all add up to an increase to the average family of at least $192 a month.

That may not seem like much to some folks, but to the average family trying to get by on $30,000 a year, it works out to $2,300. What we are really talking about is allowing them to keep more of their own money so they can invest and save, and they can be responsible for themselves.

There are enormous benefits if we can simply, for the first time, have the moral courage to say no to some of those interest groups, to limit the growth of entitlements, to actually downsize the Federal Government. We will have eliminated, at least on the House side, over 300 programs. We hope many of those cuts will survive.

There are huge benefits and sometimes those do not get talked about enough. And I would yield back to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. I do not know if the gentleman was with us when we had some of the top investment minds in this country from Wall Street come down and talk to our conference, but what did they tell us? They told us, go ahead. If you have to draw a line in the sand and shut down the Federal Government to make a point to force a balanced budget, go ahead and do that. They said Secretary Rubin is telling you that it will cause financial chaos, but that is not the case.

They told us what will cause financial chaos is if you continue to allow deficits to soar over the next 40 years the way we have allowed them to soar over the past 40 years. It will cause an incredible destructive result on Wall Street and in financial markets around the world.

And, sure enough, did you notice that during the Government shutdown that was supposed to cause such conflict that the stock market reached an all-time high and that every indicator was positive?

When we talk to the leading traders on Wall Street, what do they say? They say the reason why is because the Congress has finally showed that they are ready to put their house in order. They have finally shown that they are going to stop stealing from future generations and start doing what Americans have had to do for 200 years and balance their checkbook.

They said, please, hold the line. Your message will get out. And at that time we were upset about getting bashed on Medicare. They said, sure, right now there may be short-term political gain for the other side for attacking you for daring to save Medicare, but on Wall Street and in my business, they said if you raise spending by 45 percent, that is not a cut. And they got the numbers out, got the calculators out, and, sure enough, a 45 percent increase in Medicare is exactly what we are proposing.

More importantly than that, it is a moral issue. More important than that, if we look at what we have done since we have been elected, we have caused interest rates to go down 2 percent because we vowed, elect us, send us to Congress, we will keep our word, we will balance this budget, we will save future generations. And they said to us, these Wall Street traders, the top Wall Street minds said to us, give yourself a pat on the back. You are responsible for the interest rates dropping 2 percent because you finally have gotten serious about balancing the budget. You have finally dared to make a difference. You have finally stood up to special interests. You have finally stood up to bureaucrats. You have finally said good riddance to the tax-and-spend policies that have destroyed this country for the past 40 years.

I think, more importantly, and I cannot say it enough, it is not merely an economic issue. We could be the richest country in the world, but if we failed to be decent, we would be a failure. We have heard the quote before, America is great because America is good. And when America ceases to be good, then it will cease being great. And what is great about stealing money from the future generations?

I do not care how people want to gloss over the fact, when we spend money that we do not have, when we are $5 trillion in debt, when the Japanese and the Germans and people on Wall Street are holding these bonds, who is going to pay those bonds off, if not us?

□ 2100

If not us, it will be my 7-year-old, Joey, my 4-year-old, Andrew. It is going to be your children. It is going to be grandchildren of those people that watch the House every day. It is going to be future generations.

For all the talk about how mean spirited we are, it seems to me that we have offered the only compassionate plan to save future generations from the mean spiritedness of the liberal/socialists that have been running this institution for too long and putting forward tax-and-spend proposals that steal from your children and my children and their children.

This is not a Republican or a Democratic issue. This is about having the discipline and the decency to finally balance the budget and allow our children to have a better future than we even had. That is what it is all about: For Americans to make sure that we can ensure that when we pass the torch to the next generation, that that generation will be assured that they will have the opportunities that we had.

That is not good enough. We want them to have a better life and more opportunities that we ever had. That is what every parent wants. That is what and that is why I am so proud to be part of an institution with Republicans and Democrats alike that this past week stood up, drew a line in the sand and said, "Enough is enough. We are going to get our financial House in order."

Mr. GUTKNECHT. If the gentleman would yield, I would say one of my favorite heroes in world history was Winston Churchill. My wife needle-pointed for me one of my favorite quotes from Winston Churchill, which I have in my office. It says, "Success is never permanent. Failure is seldom fatal. The only thing that really counts is courage."

The thing that I feel proud about, what has happened in this Congress in the last 11 months, and particularly in this past week, we finally demonstrated some courage. I do not know if the American people have responded to that or whether they ever will. But you said this is really a moral issue. This is an un-American issue.

If we look historically, the people who started throwing tea in Boston Harbor, who started this great revolution that started this great American experiment in self-government, the reason, partly, they did that was because they did not believe in taxation without representation.

If we get down to the nub of it, when we talk about borrowing from future generations the way we have for so many years in this Government, it is taxation without representation, because we are taxing people who cannot even vote yet and it is morally wrong. We know it is wrong.

I live in the Midwest and we have an awful lot of farmers in the Midwest. Most of us are no more than one or two generations removed from the farm, and farmers know this. Most farmers, what they want to do is pay off the mortgage and leave their kids the farm. But if we look at it from a societal standpoint, what our previous Congresses have been doing in Washington is they have been selling the farm and leaving the kids the mortgage. I think all Americans know in their bones that it is wrong.

I hope that all Americans will begin to realize that those days are over and we have begun to change the paradigm and we are going to make this Government do what they have to do every single week and every month, and that is live within their means. That is the American thing to do and the morally right thing to do.

I am proud to be a part of this Congress and part of the group of freshmen, and if we take the credit, so be it.

And if we take the blame, so be it. But some day I hope that future generations of Americans will look back and say, "Finally, they had the courage to do the right thing."

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman. This past weekend while we were in session on Saturday, during lunch I went down and had lunch with the gentleman from Ohio [John Kasich] the budget director, and what you said reminded me of our conversation when you said you do not know whether the Americans will reward us for this. You do not know whether we are going up in the polls.

I turned to Mr. Kasich and I said, "How do you think this is going to turn out?" And he said, "Joe, I don't care. That is not relevant. We are going to balance this budget. I don't care if we get defeated. If I get defeated because of balancing the budget, what a grand and glorious way to go out."

Mr. Speaker, that is the way I feel. It has been such an honor this past week to see the freshman class on Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday and Thursday of this week, when poll numbers shot up for the President and down for us, it was so great to talk to them and not a single one said they were going to budge.

Reporters would come and say, "What about the poll numbers?" And we would cut them off and say, "That does not really matter. The polls do not matter. What matters is we keep our word."

Mr. Speaker, if I could read what we passed tonight, it is a commitment to a 7-year balanced budget and this is the language I would like to end on:

> The President and Congress shall enact legislation in the first session of the 104th Congress to achieve a balanced budget not later than fiscal year 2002, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office. The balanced budget agreement shall be estimated by the Congressional Budget Office based on the most recent current economic and technical assumptions.

Mr. Speaker, it goes on and has some more verbiage in there. But what a great honor that tonight we truly were a part of history. We have started down the path that James Madison and Thomas Jefferson and our Founding Fathers intended for us. As James Madison, one of the framers of the Constitution said,

> We have staked the entire future of the American civilization not upon the power of government, but upon the capacity of the individuals to govern themselves, control themselves, and sustain themselves according to the Ten Commandments of God.

Tonight we started down that path. We dared to make a difference. We dared to balance the budget. I am going to be very proud tomorrow when I fly home and get off the plane and see my 7-year-old and 4-year-old and know that we had a part in history and a part in ensuring that their history will be even brighter than our own. That is all we can ask.

Background—General

The Congressional Accountability Act of 1995 ("CAA"), PL 104-1, was enacted into law on January 23, 1995. In general, the CAA applies the rights and protections of eleven federal labor and employment law statutes to covered employees and employing offices within the legislative branch. Section 301 of the CAA establishes the Office of Compliance as an independent office within that branch. Section 303 of the CAA directs that the Executive Director, the chief operating officer of the Office of Compliance, shall, subject to the approval of the Board, adopt rules governing the procedures for the Office of Compliance. The rules that follow establish the procedures by which the Office of Compliance will provide for the consideration and resolution of alleged violations of the laws made applicable under Part A of Title II of the CAA. The rules include procedures for counseling, mediation, and for electing between filing a compliant with the Office of Compliance and filing a civil action in a district court of the United States. The rules also address the procedures for the conduct of hearings held as a result of the filing of a complaint and for appeals to the Board of Directors of the Office of Compliance from Hearing Officer decisions, as well as other matters of general applicability to the dispute resolution process and to the operations of the Office of Compliance.

The Executive Director invites comment from interested persons on the content of these proposed rules.

(k) Duty to proceed. An employee who initiates a proceeding under this part shall be responsible at all times for proceeding, regardless of whether her or she has designated a representative. (1) Where an employee of the Office of the Architect of the Capitol or of the Capitol Police requests counseling under the Act and these rules, the Executive Director may recommend that the employee use the grievance procedures of the Architect of the Capitol or the Capitol Police. Pursuant to Section 401 of the Act and by agreement with the Architect of the Capitol and the Capitol Police Board, when the Executive Director makes such a recommendation, the following procedures shall apply:

(i) The Executive Director shall recommend to the employee that the employee use the procedures of the Architect or of the Capitol Police Board, as appropriate, for a period generally up to 90 days, unless the Executive Director determines a longer period is appropriate for resolution of the employee's complaint through the internal procedures of the Architect or the Capitol Police Board;

(ii) After having contacted the Office and having utilized the grievance procedures of the Architect or to the Capitol Police Board, the employee may return to the procedures under these rules:

(A) after the expiration of the period recommended by the Executive Director, if the matter has not been resolved; or

(3) Notice in final decisions when employees have not initiated counseling with the Office. When an employee raises in the internal procedures of the Architect or of the Capitol Police Board an allegation which may also be raised under the procedures set forth in this subpart, any final decision pursuant to the procedures of the Architect of the Capitol or of the Capitol Police Board should include notice to the employee of his or her right to initiate the procedures under these rules within 180 days after the alleged violation occurred.

(4) Notice in final decisions when there has been a recommendation by the Executive Director. When the Executive Director has made a recommendation under paragraph 1 above, the Architect or the Capitol Police Board should include notice to the employee of his or her right to resume the procedures under these rules within 20 days after service on the employee of the final decision and shall transmit a copy of the final decision, settlement agreement, or other final decision, settlement agreement, or other final disposition of the case of the Executive Director.

§ 2.04 Mediation

(a) Explanation. Mediation is a process in which employees, employing offices and their representatives meet separately and/or jointly with a neutral trained to assist them in resolving disputes. As parties to the mediation, employees, employing offices and their representatives openly discuss alternatives to continuing their dispute, including any and all possibilities of reaching a voluntary, mutually satisfactory resolution. The neutral has no power to impose a specific resolution, and the mediation process, whether or not a resolution is reached, is strictly confidential, pursuant to Section 416 of the Act.

(b) Initiation. Not more than 15 days after receipt by the employee of the notice of the conclusion of the counseling period under section 2.03(l), the employee may file with the Office a written request for mediation. The request for mediation shall contain the employee's name, address, and telephone number, and the name of the employing office. Failure to request mediation within the prescribed period, will preclude the employee's further pursuit of his or her claim.

(c) Notice of commencement of the mediation period. The Office shall notify the employing office or its designated representative of the commencement of the mediation period.

(d) Selection of Neutrals; Disqualification. Upon receipt of the request for mediation, the Executive Director shall assign one or more neutrals to commence the mediation process. In the event that a neutral considers him or herself unable to perform in a neutral role in a given situation, he or she shall withdraw from the matter and immediately shall notify the Office of the withdrawal. Any party may ask the Office to disqualify a neutral by filing a written request, including the reasons for such request, with the Executive Director. This request shall be filed as soon as the party has reason to believe there is a basis for disqualification. The Executive Director's decision on this request shall be final and unreviewable.

(e) Duration and Extension. (1) The mediation period shall be 30 days beginning on the date the request for mediation is received, unless the Office grants an extension.

(2) The Office may extend the mediation period upon the joint request of the parties. The request shall be written and filed with the Office no later than the 28th day of the mediation period. The request shall set forth the joint nature of the request and the reasons therefor, and specify when the parties expect to conclude their discussions. Requests for additional extensions may be made in the same manner. Approval of any extensions shall be within the sole discretion of the Office.

(f) Procedures. (1) The Neutral's Role. After assignment of the case, the neutral will promptly contact the parties. The neutral has the responsibility to conduct the mediation, including deciding how many meetings are necessary and who may participate in each meeting. The neutral may accept written submissions from the parties.

(2) The Agreement to Mediate. At the commencement of the mediation, the neutral will ask the parties to sign an agreement ("the Agreement to Mediate") to adhere to the confidentiality of the process. The Agreement to Mediate will also provide that the parties to the mediation will not seek to have the counselor or the neutral testify or otherwise present evidence in any subsequent civil action under Section 408 of the Act or any other proceeding.

(g) Who may participate. The covered employee, the employing office, their respective representatives, and the Office may meet, jointly or separately, with the neutral. A representative of an employing office who has actual authority to agree to a settlement agreement on behalf of the employing office must be present at the mediation or must be immediately accessible by telephone during the mediation.

(h) Conclusion of the Mediation Period and Notice. If, at the end of the mediation period, the parties have not resolved the matter that forms the basis of the request for mediation, the Office shall provide the employee and the employing office, and their representatives, with written notice that the mediation period has concluded. At the same time, the Office will notify the employee of his or her right to elect to file a complaint with the Office in accordance with Section 405 of the Act and Section 2.06 of these rules or to file a civil action pursuant to Section 408 of the Act and Section 2.11 of these rules.

(i) Independence of the Mediation Process and the Neutral. The Office will maintain the independence of the mediation process and the neutral. No individual, who is appointed by the Executive Director to mediate, may conduct or aid in a hearing conducted under Section 405 of the Act with respect to the same matter or shall be subject to subpoena or any other compulsory process with respect to the same matter.

(j) Confidentiality. Except as necessary to consult with the parties, their counsel or other designated representatives, the parties to the mediation, the neutral, and the Office shall not disclose, in whole or in part, any information or records obtained through, or prepared specifically for, the Mediation process. This rule shall not preclude a neutral from consulting with the Office, except that a neutral shall not consult with a party or witness within the Office when the covered employee is an employee of the Office. This rule shall also not preclude the Office from reporting statistical infomation that does not reveal the identity of the employees or employing offices involved in the mediation. All parties to the action and their representatives will be advised of the confidentiality requirements of this process and of the sanctions that might be imposed for violating these requirements.

§ 2.05 Election of Proceeding

(a) Pursuant to Section 404 of the Act, not later than 90 days after a covered employee receives notice of the end of mediation under Section 2.04(h) of these rules, but no sooner than 30 days after that date, the covered employee may either: file a complaint with the Office in accordance with Section 405 of the Act and the procedure set out in Section 2.06, below; or file a civil action in accordance with Section 408 of the Act and Section 2.11 below in the United States District Court for the district in which the employee is employed or for the District of Columbia.

(b) A covered employee who files a civil action pursuant to Section 2.11, may not thereafter file a complaint under Section 2.06 on the same matter.

§ 2.06 Complaints

(a) Who may file. An employee who has completed mediation under Section 2.04 may timely file a complaint with the Office.

(b) When to file. A complaint may be filed no sooner than 30 days after the date of receipt of the notice under Section 2.04(h), but no later than 90 days after that notice.

(c) Form and Contents. A complaint shall be written or typed on a complaint form available from the Office. All complaints shall be signed by the covered employee, or his or her representative, and shall contain the following information:

(1) the name, mailing address, and telephone number(s) of the complainant;

(2) the name(s) and title(s) of the individual(s) involved in the action that the employee claims is a violation of the Act;

(3) the name, address and telephone number of the employing office involved;

(4) a description of the conduct being challenged, including the date(s) of the conduct;

(5) a brief description of why the complainant believes the challenged conduct is a violation of the Act and the Section(s) of the Act involved;

(6) a statement of the relief or remedy sought; and

(7) the name, address, and telephone number of the representative, if any, who will act on behalf of the complainant.

(d) Amendments. Amendments to the complaint may be permitted by the Office or, after assignment, by a Hearing Officer, on the condition that all parties to the proceeding have adequate notice to prepare to meet the new allegations, and so long as the amendments related to the violations for which the employee has completed counseling and mediation and permitting such amendments will not unduly prejudice the rights of the employing office or other parties, unduly delay the completion of the hearing or otherwise interfere with or impede the proceedings.

(e) Service of Complaint. Upon receipt of a complaint or an amended complaint, the Office shall serve the employing office named in the complaint, or its designated representative, with a copy of the complaint or amended complaint and a copy of these rules. The Office shall include a service list containing the names and addresses of the parties and their designated representatives.

(f) Answer. Within 15 days after service of a copy of a complaint or an amended complaint, the respondent employing office shall file an answer with the Office and serve one copy on the complainant. The answer shall contain a statement of the position of the respondent employing office on each of the issues raised in the complaint, including admissions, denials, or explanations of each allegation made in the complaint and any other defenses to the complaint. Failure to raise a claim or defense in the answer shall not bar its submission later unless to do so would unduly prejudice the rights of the other party or unduly delay or otherwise interfere with or impede the proceedings.

§ 2.07 Appointment of the Hearing Officer

Upon the filing of a complaint, the Executive Director will appoint an independent Hearing Officer, who shall have the authority specified in Section 7.01(b) below. The Hearing Officer shall not be the neutral who mediated the matter under Section 2.04 of these rules.

§ 2.08 Filing, Service, and Size Limitations of Motions, Briefs, Responses or Other Documents

(a) Filing with the Office: Number. One original and three copies of all motions, briefs, responses, or other documents, must be filed, whenever required, with the Office or Hearing Office. However, when a party aggrieved by the decision of a Hearing Officer files an appeal with the Board, one original and seven copies of both any appeal brief and any responses must be filed with the Office.

(b) Service. The parties shall serve on each other one copy of all brief or motions filed with the Office, other that the Complaint, which the Office will serve pursuant to Section 2.06(e) of these rules. Service shall be made by mailing or by hand delivering a copy of the motion, brief, response or other document to each party on the service list previously provided by the Office. Each of these documents, other than the Complaint, must be accompanied by a certificate of service specifying how and when service was made. It shall be the duty of all parties to notify the Office and one another in writing of any changes in the names or addresses on the service list.

(c) Time limitations of response to motions or brief and reply. Unless otherwise specified by the Hearing Office or these rules, a party shall file a response to a motion or brief within 15 days of the service of the motion or brief upon the party. Any reply to such response shall be filed and served within 5 days of the service of the response.

(d) Size limitations. Except as otherwise specified by the Hearing Officer or these rules, no brief, motion, response, or supporting memorandum filed with the Office shall exceed 35 pages, or 8,750 words, exclusive of attachments. The Board, the Office or Hearing Officer may waive, raise or reduce this limitation for good cause shown or on its own initiative. Briefs, motions, responses, and supporting memorandum shall be on standard letter size paper (8½″ 11″).

§ 2.09 Dismissal of Complaints

(a) A Hearing Officer may, after notice and opportunity to respond, dismiss any claim that the Hearing Officer finds to be frivolous or that fails to state and claim upon which relief may be granted.

(b) A Hearing Officer may, after notice and an opportunity to respond, dismiss a complaint because it fails to comply with the applicable time limits or other requirements under these rules.

(c) If any employee fails to proceed with an action, the Hearing Officer may dismiss the complaint with prejudice.

(d) Appeal. A dismissal by the Hearing Officer made under Section 7.17 of these rules may be subject to appeal before the Board if the aggrieved party files a timely petition for review under Section 8.01.

(e) Withdrawal of Complaint by Complainant. At any time an employee may withdraw his or her own complaint by filing a notice with the Office for transmittal to the Hearing Officer and by serving a copy on the employing office or representative. Any such withdrawal must be approved by the Executive Director.

§ 2.10 Confidentiality

Pursuant to Section 416(c) of the Act, all proceedings and deliberations of Hearing Officers and the Board, including any related records, shall be confidential. A violation of the confidentiality requirements of the Act and these rules could result in the imposition of sanctions. Nothing in these rules shall prevent the Executive Director from reporting statistical information to the Senate and House of Representatives, so long as that statistical information does not reveal the identity of the employees involved or of employing offices that are the subject of a matter.

§ 2.11 Filing of Civil Action

(a) Filing. Section 4.04 of the Act provides that as an alternative for filing a complaint under Section 2.06, an employee who receives notice of the end of mediation pursuant to Section 2.04(h) may elect to file a civil action in accordance with Section 408 of the Act in the United States District court for the district in which the employee is employed or for the District of Columbia.

(a) Explanation. Discovery is the process by which a party may obtain relevant information, not privileged, from another person, including a party, for the purpose of assisting that party in developing, preparing and presenting its case at the hearing.

(b) Office policy regarding discovery. It is the policy of the Office to encourage the early and voluntary exchange of relevant and material nonprivileged information between the parties, including the names and addresses of witnesses and copies of relevant and material documents, and to encourage Hearing Officers to develop procedures which allow for the greatest exchange of relevant and material information and which minimize the need for parties to formally request such information.

(c) Discovery availability. Pursuant to Section 405(e) of the Act, the Hearing Officer in his or her discretion may permit reasonable prehearing discovery. In exercising that discretion, the Hearing Officer may be guided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

(3) The Hearing Officer may issue any other order to prevent discovery or disclosure of confidential or privileged materials or information, as well as hearing or trial preparation materials and any other information deemed not discloseable, or to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense.

(d) Claims of privilege. Whenever a party withholds information otherwise discoverable under these rules by claiming that it is privileged or confidential or subject to protection as hearing or trial preparation materials, the party shall make the claim expressly and shall describe the nature of the documents, communications or things not produced or disclosed in a manner that, without revealing the information itself privileged or protected, will enable other parties to assess the applicability of the privilege or protection.

(a) Authority to issue subpoenas. At the request of a party, a Hearing Officer may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and for the production of correspondence, books, papers, documents, or other records. The attendance of witnesses and the production of records may be required from any place within the United States.

(b) Request. A request for the issuance of a subpoena requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses or the production of documents or other evidence under paragraph (a) above shall be submitted to the Hearing Officer at least 15 days in advance of the date scheduled for the commencement of the hearing. If the subpoena is sought as part of the discovery process, the request shall be submitted to the Hearing Officer at least 10 days in advance of the date set for the attendance of the witness at a deposition or the production of documents.

(c) Forms and showing. Requests for subpoenas shall be submitted in writing to the Hearing Officer and shall specify with particularity the witness, correspondence, books, papers, documents, or other records desired and shall be supported by a showing of general relevance and reasonable scope.

(d) Rulings. The Hearing Officer shall promptly rule on the request.

§ 6.03 Service

Service of a subpoena may be made by any person who is over 18 years of age and not a party to the proceeding. Service may be made either:

(a) In person,

(b) By registered or certified mail, or express mail with return receipt, or

(c) By delivery to a responsible person (named) at the residence or place of business (as appropriate) of the person to be served.

§ 6.04 Return of service

When service of a subpoena is effected, the person serving the subpoena shall certify on the return of service the date and the manner of service.

§ 6.05 Motion to quash

Any person against whom a subpoena is directed may file a motion to quash or limit the subpoena setting forth the reasons why the subpoena should not be complied with or why it should be limited in scope. This motion shall be filed with the Hearing Officer within 10 days after service of the subpoena.

§ 6.06 Enforcement

(a) Objections and Requests for enforcement. If a person has been served with a subpoena pursuant to Section 6.03 but fails or refuses to comply with its terms or otherwise objects to it, the party or person objecting or the party seeking compliance may seek a ruling from a Hearing Officer. The request for a ruling should be submitted in writing to the Hearing Officer. However, it may be made orally on the record at the hearing at the Hearing Officer's discretion. The party seeking compliance shall present the return of service and, except where the witness was required to appear before the Hearing Officer, shall submit evidence, by affidavit or declaration, of the failure or refusal to obey the subpoena.

(b) Ruling by Hearing Officer. (1) The Hearing Officer shall promptly rule on the request for enforcement and/or the objection(s).

(2) On request of the objecting witness or any party, the Hearing Officer shall, or on the Hearing Officer's own initiative the Hearing Officer may, refer the ruling to the Board for review.

(c) Review by the Board. The Board may overrule, modify, remand or affirm the ruling of the Hearing Officer and in its discretion, may direct the General Counsel to apply in the name of the Office for an order from a United States district court to enforce the subpoena.

(d) Application to an appropriate court; civil contempt. If a person fails to comply with a subpoena, the Board may direct the General Counsel to apply, in the name of the Office, to an appropriate United States district court for an order requiring that person to appear before the Hearing Officer to give testimony or produce records. Any failure to obey a lawful order of the district court may be held by such court to be a civil contempt thereof.

(a) Exercise of authority. The Hearing Officer may exercise authority as provided in paragraph (b) of this Section upon his or her own initiative or upon the motion of a party, as appropriate.

(b) Authority. Hearing Officers shall conduct fair and impartial hearings and take all necessary action to avoid undue delay in the disposition of all proceedings. They shall have all powers necessary to that end unless otherwise limited by law, including, but not limited to, the authority to:

(1) Administer oaths and affirmations;

(2) Rule on motions to disqualify designated representatives;

(3) Issue subpoenas in accordance with Section 6.02;

(4) Rule upon offers of proof and receive relevant evidence;

(5) Rule upon discovery issues as appropriate under Sections 6.01 to 6.06;

(6) Hold prehearing conferences for the settlement and simplification of issues;

(7) Convene a hearing as appropriate, regulate the course of the hearing, and maintain decorum and exclude from the hearing any person who disrupts, or threatens to disrupt, that decorum;

(8) Exclude from the hearing any person, except any complainant, any party, the attorney or representative of any complainant or party, or any witness while testifying;

(9) Rule on all motions, witness and exhibit lists and proposed findings, including motions for summary judgment;

(10) Require the filing of briefs, memoranda of law and the presentation of oral argument with respect to any question of law;

(11) Order the production of evidence and the appearance of witnesses;

(12) Impose sanctions as provided under Section 7.02 of these rules;

(13) File decisions on the issues presented at the hearing;

(14) Maintain the confidentiality of proceedings; and

(15) Waive or modify any procedural requirements of Sections 6 and 7 of these rules so long as permitted by the Act.

§ 7.02 Sanctions

The Hearing Officer may impose sanctions upon the parties, under, but not limited to, the circumstances set forth in this Section.

(a) Failure to comply with an order. When a party fails to comply with an order (including an order for the taking of a deposition, for the production of evidence within the party's control, or for production of witnesses), the Hearing Officer may:

(1) Draw an inference in favor of the requesting party on the issue related to the information sought.

(2) Stay further proceedings until the order is obeyed.

(3) Prohibit the party failing to comply with such order from introducing evidence concerning, or otherwise relying upon, testimony relating to the information sought.

(4) Permit the requesting party to introduce secondary evidence concerning the information sought.

(5) Strike any part of the complaint, briefs, answer, or other submissions of the party failing to comply with such request.

(6) Direct judgment against the non-complying party in whole or in part.

(7) Order that the non-complying party, or the representative advising that party, pay all or part of the attorney's fees and reasonable expenses of the other party or parties or of the Office, caused by the failure, unless the Hearing Officer or the Board finds that the failure was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of attorney's fees and/or expenses unjust.

(b) Failure to prosecute or defend. If a party fails to prosecute or defend a position, the Hearing Officer may dismiss the action with prejudice or rule for the petitioner.

(c) Failure to make timely filing. The Hearing Officer may refuse to consider any request, motion or other action that is not filed in a timely fashion in compliance with this Part.

§ 7.03 Disqualification of the Hearing Officer

(a) In the event that a Hearing Officer considers himself or herself disqualified, either because of personal bias or of an interest in the case or for some other disqualifying reason, he or she shall withdraw from the case, stating in writing or on the record the reasons for his or her withdrawal, and shall immediately notify the Office of the withdrawal.

(b) Any party may file a motion requesting that a Hearing Officer withdraw on the basis of personal bias or of an interest in the case or for some other disqualifying reason. This motion shall specifically set forth the reasons supporting the request and be filed as soon as the party has reason to believe that there is a basis for disqualification.

(c) The Hearing Officer shall rule on the withdrawal motion. If the motion is denied, the party requesting withdrawal may take the motion to the Executive Director. The motion to the Executive Director, together with a supporting brief, shall be filed within 5 days of service of the denial of the motion by the Hearing Officer. Upon receipt of the motion, the Executive Director will determine whether a response from the other party or parties is required, and if so, will fix by order the time for the filing of the response. Any objection to the ruling of the Executive Director on the withdrawal motion shall not be deemed waived by further participation in the hearing and may be the basis for an appeal to the Board from the decision of the Hearing Officer under Section 8.01 of these rules. Such objection will not stay the conduct of the hearing.

§ 7.04 Motions and Prehearing Conference

(a) Motions. When a case is before a Hearing Officer, motions of the parties shall be filed with the Hearing Office and shall be in writing except for oral motions made on the record during the hearing. All written motions and any responses to them shall include a proposed order, where applicable. Only with the Hearing Officer's advance approval may either party file additional responses to the motion or to the response to the motion. Motions for extension of time will be granted only for good cause shown.

(b) Scheduling of the Prehearing Conference. Within 7 days after assignment, the Hearing Office shall service on the employee and the employing office and their designated representatives written notice setting forth the time, date, and place of the prehearing conference.

(c) Prehearing conference memoranda. The Hearing Officer may order each party to prepare a prehearing conference memorandum. That memorandum may include:

(1) The major factual contentions and legal issues that the party intends to raise at the hearing in short, successive, and numbered paragraphs, along with any proposed stipulations of fact or law. For example, in a case of alleged unlawful discrimination, a complainant's statement of legal issues should include that party's statement of the appropriate prima facie case; and employing office's statement should include the alleged legitimate, non-discriminatory reason(s) that the employing office will articulate; and affirmative defenses, if any, which may be raised.

(2) An estimate of the time necessary for presentation of the party's case;

(3) The specific relief, including the amount of monetary relief, that is being or will be requested;

(4) The names of potential witnesses for the party's case, except for potential rebuttal witnesses, and the purpose for which they will be called and a list of documents that the party is seeking from the opposing party, and, if discovery was permitted, the status of any pending request for discovery. (It is not necessary to list each document requested. Instead, the party may refer to the request for discovery.)

(5) A brief description of any other unresolved issues.

(d) At the prehearing conference, the Hearing Officer may discuss the subjects specified in paragraph 4 above and the manner in which the hearing will be conducted and proceed. In addition the Hearing Officer may explore settlement possibilities and consider how the factual and legal issues might be simplified and any other issues that might expedite the early resolution of the dispute. The Hearing Officer shall issue an order, which recites the action taken at the conference and the agreements made by the parties as to any of the matters considered and which limits the issues to those not disposed of by admissions or agreements of the parties. Such order, when entered, controls the course of the proceeding, subject to later modification by the Hearing Officer by his or her own order or upon proper request of a party for good cause shown.

§ 7.05 Scheduling the Hearing

(a) Date, time, and place of hearing. The Office shall issue the notice of hearing, which shall fix the date, time, and place of hearing. In no event, absent a postponement granted by the Office will a hearing commence after than 60 days after the filing of the complaint.

(b) Motions for postponement or a continuance. Motions for postponement or for a continuance by either party shall be made in writing to the Office, shall set forth the reasons for the request and the position of the opposing party on the postponement. Such a motion may be granted upon a showing of good cause. In no event will a hearing commence later than 90 days after the filing of the complaint.

§ 7.06 Consolidation and Joinder of Cases

(a) Explanation. (1) Consolidation is when two or more parties have cases that might be treated as one because they contain identical or similar issues or in such other appropriate circumstances.

(2) Joinder is when one person has two or more claims pending and they are united for consideration. For example, where a single individual who has one appeal pending challenging a 30-day suspension and another appeal pending challenging a subsequent dismissal, joinder might be warranted.

(b) The Board, the Office, or a Hearing Officer may consolidate or join cases on their own initiative or on the motion of a party if to do so would expedite processing of the cases and not adversely affect the interests of the parties, taking into account the confidentiality requirements of Section 416 of the Act.

§ 7.07 Conduct of Hearing; Disqualification of Representatives

(a) Pursuant to Section 405(d)(1) of the Act, the Hearing Officer will conduct the hearing in closed session on the record. Only the Hearing Officer, the parties and their representatives, and witnesses during the time they are testifying, will be permitted to attend, except that the Office may not be precluded from observing the hearings. The Hearing Officer, or a person designated by the Hearing Officer or the Executive Director, shall control the recording of the proceedings.

(b) The hearing will be conducted as an administrative proceeding. Witnesses shall testify under oath or affirmation. Except as specified in the Act and in these rules, the Hearing Officer will conduct the hearing, to the greatest extent practicable, in accordance with the principles and procedures in Sections 554 through 557 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(c) No later than the opening of the hearing, or as otherwise ordered by the Hearing Officer, each party shall submit to the Hearing Officer and to the opposing party a typed list of the witnesses, except rebuttal witnesses, expected to be called to testify.

(d) At the commencement of the hearing, or as otherwise ordered by the Hearing Officer, the Hearing Officer may consider any stipulations of facts and law pursuant to Section 7.10, take official notice of certain facts pursuant to Section 7.11, rule on objections made by the parties and hear the examination and cross-examination of witnesses. Each party will be expected to present his or her cases in a concise manner, limiting the testimony of witnesses and submission of documents to relevant matters.

(e) If the Hearing Officer concludes that a representative of an employee, a witness, or an employing office has a conflict of interest, he or she may, after giving the representative an opportunity to respond, disqualify the representative. In that event, within the time limits established by the Act, the affected party will have a reasonable time to retain other representation.

§ 7.08 Transcript

(a) Preparation. An accurate electronic or stenographic record of the hearing shall be kept and shall be the sole official record of the proceeding. The Office shall be responsible for the cost of transcription of the hearing. Upon request, a copy of a transcript of the hearing shall be provided to each party, provided, however, that such party has first agreed to maintain and respect the confidentiality of such transcript in accordance with the applicable rules prescribed by the Office or the Hearing Officer in order to effectuate Section 416(c) of the Act. Additional copies of the transcript shall be made available to a party upon payment of costs. Exceptions to the payment requirement may be granted for good cause shown. A motion for an exception shall be made in writing and accompanied by an affidavit or declaration setting forth the reasons for the request and shall be granted upon a showing of good cause. Requests for copies of transcripts shall be directed to the Office. The Office may, by agreement with the person making the request, make arrangements with the official hearing reporter for required services to be charged to the requester.

(b) Corrections. Corrections to the official transcript will be permitted. Motions for correction must be submitted within 10 days of service of the transcript upon the party. Corrections of the official transcript will be permitted only when errors of substance are involved and only upon approval of the Hearing Officer. The Hearing Officer may make corrections at any time with notice to the parties.

§ 7.09 Admissibility of Evidence

The Hearing Officer shall apply the Federal rules of evidence to the greatest extent practicable. These rules provide that the Hearing Officer may exclude evidence if, among other things, it constitutes inadmissible hearsay or its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, by confusion of the issues, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence.

§ 7.10 Stipulations

The parties may stipulate as to any matter of fact. Such a stipulation will satisfy a party's burden of proving the fact alleged.

§ 7.11 Official Notice

The Hearing Officer on his or her own motion or on motion of a party, may take official notice of a fact that is not subject to reasonable dispute because it is either: (a) A matter of common knowledge; or (b) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. Official notice taken of any fact satisfies a party's burden of proving the fact noticed.

Where a decision, or part thereof, rests on the official notice of a material fact not appearing in the evidence in the record, the fact of official notice shall be so stated in the decision, and any party, upon timely request, shall be afforded an opportunity to show the contrary.

§ 7.12 Confidentiality

Pursuant to Section 416 of the Act, all proceedings and deliberations of Hearing Officers and the Board, including the transcripts of hearings and any related records, shall be confidential, except as specified in Section 416(d), (e), and (f) of the Act. All parties to the proceeding and their representatives, and witnesses who appear at the hearing, will be advised of the importance of confidentiality in this process and of their obligations, subject to sanctions, to maintain it.

§ 7.13 Immediate Board Review of a Ruling by a Hearing Officer

(a) Review strongly disfavored. Board review of a ruling by a hearing officer while a proceeding is ongoing (an "interlocutory appeal") is strongly disfavored. In general, a request for interlocutory review may go before the Board for consideration only if the Hearing Officer, on his or her own motion or by motion of the parties, determines that the issue presented is of such importance to the proceeding that it requires the Board's immediate attention.

(b) Standards for review. In determining whether to forward a request for interlocutory review to the Board, the Hearing Officer shall consider the following:

(1) Whether the ruling involves a significant question of law or policy about which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion; and

(2) Whether an immediate review of the Hearing Officer ruling by the Board will materially advance the completion of the proceeding; and

(3) Whether denial of immediate review will cause undue harm to a party or the public.

(c) Time for Filing. A motion by a party for interlocutory review of a ruling of the Hearing Officer shall be filed with the Hearing Officer within 5 days after service of the ruling upon the parties. The motion shall include arguments in support of both interlocutory review and the determination to be made by the Board upon review. Responses, if any, shall be filed with the Hearing Officer within 3 days after service of the motion.

(d) Hearing Officer Action. If the conditions set forth in paragraph (b) above are met, the Hearing Officer may forward a request for interlocutory review to the Board for its immediate consideration. Any such submission shall explain the basis on which the Hearing Officer concluded that the standards for interlocutory review have been met.

(e) Grant of Interlocutory Review Within Board's Sole Discretion. The Board, in its sole discretion, may grant interlocutory review.

(f) Stay pending review. Unless otherwise directed by the Board, the stay of any proceedings during the pendency of either a request for interlocutory review or the review itself shall be within the discretion of the Hearing Officer.

(g) Denial of Motion not Appealable; Mandamus. The grant or denial of a motion for a request for interlocutory review shall not be appealable. The Hearing Officer shall promptly bring a denial of such a motion, and the reasons therefor, to the attention of the Board. If, upon consideration of the motion and the reason for denial, the Board believes that interlocutory review is warranted, it may grant the review sua sponte. In addition, the Board may in its discretion, in extraordinary circumstances, entertain directly from a party a writ of mandamus to review a ruling of a Hearing Officer.

(h) Procedures before Board. Upon its acceptance of a ruling of the Hearing Officer for interlocutory review, the Board shall issue an order setting forth the procedures that will be followed in the conduct of that review.

(i) Review of a Final Decision. Denial of interlocutory review will not affect a party's right to challenge rulings, which are otherwise appealable, as part of an appeal to the Board from the Hearing Officer's decision issued under Section 7.17 of these rules.

§ 7.14 Briefs

(a) May be filed. The Hearing Officer may permit the parties to file posthearing briefs on the factual and the legal issues presented in the case.

(b) Length. No principal brief shall exceed 50 pages, or 12,500 words, and no reply brief 25 pages, or 6,250 words, exclusive of tables and pages limited only to quotations of statutes, rules, and the like. Motions to file extended briefs shall be granted only for good cause shown; the Hearing Officer may in his or her discretion also reduce the page limits. Briefs in excess of 10 pages shall include an index and a table of authorities.

(c) Format. Every brief must be easily readable. Briefs must have double spacing between each line of text, except for quoted texts and footnotes, which may be single-spaced.

7.15 Closing the record

(a) The record shall be closed at the conclusion of the hearing. However, when the Hearing Officer allows the parties to submit additional evidence previously identified for introduction, the Hearing Officer may allow an additional period before the conclusion of the hearing as is necessary for that purpose.

(b) Once the record is closed, no additional evidence or argument shall be accepted into the record except upon a showing that new and material evidence has become available that was not available despite due diligence prior to the closing of the record. However, the Hearing Officer shall make part of the record any motions for attorney fees, supporting documentation, and determinations thereon, and any approved correction to the transcript.

§ 7.16 Official Record

The transcript of testimony and the exhibits, together with all papers and motions filed in the proceeding, shall constitute the exclusive and official record.

§ 7.17 Hearing Officer Decisions; Entry in Records of the Office

(a) Pursuant to Section 405(g) of the Act, no later than 90 days after the conclusion of the hearing, the Hearing Officer shall issue a written decision.

(b) Upon issuance, the decision and order of the Hearing Officer shall be entered into the records of the Office.

(c) The Office shall promptly provide a copy of the decision and order of the Hearing Officer to the parties.

(d) If there is no appeal of a decision and order of a Hearing Officer, that decision becomes a final decision of the Office, which is subject to enforcement under Section 8.01 of these rules.

Subpart H—Proceedings Before the Board

§ 8.01 Appeal to the Board

§ 8.02 Compliance with Final Decisions, Requests for Enforcement

§ 8.03 Judicial Review

§ 8.01 Appeal to the Board

(a) No later than 30 days after the entry of the decision of the Hearing Officer in the records of the Office, an aggrieved party may seek review of that decision by the Board by filing with the Office a petition for review by the Board. The appeal must be served on the opposing party or its representative.

(b) Unless otherwise ordered by the Board, within 21 days following the filing of a petition for review to the Board, the appellant shall file and serve a supporting brief. That brief shall identify with particularity those findings or conclusions in the decision that are challenged and shall refer specifically to the portions of the record and the provisions of statutes or rules that are alleged to support each assertion made on appeal.

Unless otherwise ordered by the Board, within 21 days following the service of the appellant's brief, the opposing party may file and serve a responsive brief. Unless otherwise ordered by the Board, within 10 days following the service of the appellee's responsive brief, the appellant may file and serve a reply brief.

(c) Upon the request of any party or upon its own order, the Board, in its discretion, may hold oral argument on an appeal.

(d) Upon appeal, the Board shall issue a written decision setting forth the reasons for its decision. The Board may affirm, reverse, modify or remand the decision of the Hearing Officer in whole or in part.

(e) The Board may remand the matter to the Hearing Officer for further action or proceedings, including the reopening of the record for the taking of additional evidence. The Hearing Officer shall render a report to the Board on the remanded matters. Upon receipt of the report, the Board shall determine whether the views of the parties on the content of the report should be obtained in writing and, where necessary, shall fix by order the time of the submission of those views. A decision of the Board following completion of the remand shall be the final decision of the Board and shall be subject to judicial review.

(g) Pursuant to Section 406(c) of the Act, in conducting its review of the decision of a Hearing Officer, the Board shall set aside a decision if it determines that the decision was:

(1) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not consistent with law;

(2) not made consistent with required procedures; or

(3) unsupported by substantial evidence.

(h) In making determinations under paragraph (g), above, the Board shall review the whole record, or those parts of it cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error.

(i) Record: what constitutes. The complaint and any amendments, notice of hearing, answer and any amendments, motions, rulings, orders, stipulations, exhibits, documentary evidence, depositions, and the transcript of the hearing (together with any electronic recording of the hearing if the original reporting was performed electronically) together with the hearing officer's decision and the petition for review, and any cross-petition, shall constitute the record in the case.

§ 8.02 Compliance with Final Decisions, Requests for Enforcement

(a) A party required to take any action under the terms of a final decision of the Office shall carry out its terms promptly, and shall within 30 days after the decision or order becomes final and goes into effect by its terms, provide the Office and all parties to the proceedings with a compliance report specifying the manner in which compliance with the provisions of the decision or order has been accomplished. If complete compliance has not been accomplished within 30 days, the party required to take any such action shall submit a compliance report specifying why compliance with any provision of the decision order has not yet been fully accomplished, the steps being taken to assure full compliance, and the anticipated date by which full compliance will be achieved.

(b) The Office may require additional reports as necessary;

(c) If the Office does not receive notice of compliance in accordance with paragraph (a) of this Section, the Office shall make inquiries to determine the status of compliance. If the Office cannot determine that full compliance is forthcoming, the Office shall report the failure to comply to the Board and recommend whether court enforcement of the decision should be sought.

(d) Any party may petition the Board for enforcement of a final decision of the Office or the Board. The petition shall specifically set forth the reasons why the petitioner believes enforcement is necessary.

(e) Upon receipt of a report of non-compliance or a petition for enforcement of a final decision, or as it otherwise determines, the Board may issue a notice to any person or party to show cause why the Board should not seek judicial enforcement of its decision or order.

(f) Within the discretion of the Board, it may direct the General Counsel to petition the Court for enforcement of a decision under Section 406(e) of the Act whenever the Board finds that a party has failed to comply with its decision and order.

§ 8.03 Judicial Review

Pursuant to Section 407 of the Act, a party aggrieved by a final decision of the Board under Section 406(e) in cases arising under Part A of Title II of the Act may file a petition for review with the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Subpart I—Other Matters of General Applicability

§ 9.02 Ex parte Communications
§ 9.03 Settlement Agreements
§ 9.04 Revocation, amendment or waiver of rules

§ 9.01 Attorney's Fees and Costs

(a) Request. No later than 20 days after the entry of a Hearing Officer's decision under Section 7.17 or after service of a Board decision by the Office, the complainant, if he or she is a prevailing party, may submit to the Hearing Officer who heard the case initially a request for the award of reasonable attorney's fees and costs, following the form specified in paragraph (b) below. The Board or the Hearing Officer, after giving the respondent an appointment to reply, shall rule on the request.

(b) Form of Request. In addition to setting forth the legal and factual bases upon which the attorney's fees and/or costs are sought, a request for attorney's fees and/or costs shall be accompanied by:

(b) Informal Resolution. At any time before a covered employee files a complaint under Section 405, a covered employee and the employing office, on their own, may agree voluntarily and informally to resolve a dispute, so long as the resolution does not require a waiver of a covered employee's rights or the commitment by the employing office to an enforceable obligation.

(c) Formal Settlement Agreement. The parties may agree formally to settle all or part of a disputed matter. In that event, the agreement shall be in writing and submitted to the Executive Director for review and approval.

§ 9.04 Revocation, amendment or waiver of rules

(a) The Executive Director, subject to the approval of the Board, may revoke or amend these rules by publishing proposed changes in the Congressional Record and providing for a comment period of not less than 30 days. Following the comment period, any changes to the rules are final once they are published in the Congressional Record.

(b) The Board or a Hearing Officer may waive a procedural rule contained in this Part in an individual case for good cause shown if application of the rule is not required by law.

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER ____________________

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report." ◆

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

(Mark one square only)

Is this an Amendment?
☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

PAGE 1◆

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

Is this an Amendment?

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report." ◆

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

PAGE 1 ◆

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.
